Form of Bequest

I give and bequeath to The Century Association, of the City of New York, a New York corporation, the sum of $_____.

HISTORICAL

The Century was founded and its first Constitution adopted on January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association. Forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders; forty-six others joined during the year. The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, the Association was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended on March 29, 1883.

During its early years, The Century occupied rooms at 495 Broadway from the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849, at 435 Broome Street to the spring of 1850, and at 575 Broadway until May, 1852.

By this time, it required a house and moved to 24 Clinton Place (now 46 East Eighth Street). This was its home until the spring of 1857, when it made another move, to a house at 109 (old number 42) East Fifteenth Street. On January 10, 1891, it occupied its present Clubhouse at 7 West 43rd Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

The lamp that burns at each meeting of The Century was designed in 1858 for The Column, a literary society founded in 1825. It was lighted at all subsequent meetings of The Column until Centurions John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, the only surviving members of that organization, presented it to The Century in 1901 as "a silver symbol intended to be a lasting memorial to The Column." They also presented to "all present and future members" of The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The minutes of their meeting concluded, "The Column then adjourned sine die." Today, more than one hundred years later, the lamp still burns.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1963:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

Committee on Exhibitions

The program arranged by the Committee on Exhibitions brought the following to the Gallery during the year:

January 9–February 3: Figures and Phantasies by Elihu Root, Jr.

February 6–March 3: Recent Paintings, 1959-1962, by Peppino Mangravite

March 6–May 26: Murals, Water Colors, Sketches, and Drawings by Artist Members

June 5–September 29: Summer Exhibition of Photographs by Centurions

October 2–November 2: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members

November 13–January 31: Autumn Exhibition of Paintings and Sculpture by Artist Members

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members, John Koch and Louis Bouché were the jury of award. They chose works by the following artists, who were presented with silver ash trays: Alfred Bendiner, James A. Corscaden, Erdman Harris, George P. Hunt, Samuel H. Ordway, Jr., Elihu Root, Jr., and Whitney North Seymour, Jr.

The popular award for the work liked best by members and their friends who saw the exhibition was made to Hugh De Haven, who also received a silver ash tray. Those receiving Honorable Mention were: Winthrop W. Aldrich, Walker O. Cain, Hugh De Haven, Samuel E. Homsey, and Theodore Sizer.

In the Autumn Exhibition of Sculpture and Oil Paintings by Artist Members, a jury comprising René d'Harnoncourt, Walter C. Baker, and Sheldon Keck awarded the Art Committee Medal to Paul Sample for his oil painting Jacob's Journey to Egypt. For his oil painting Incantation, Charles Shaw was awarded Honorable Mention. The winner of the popular vote for his oil painting Shag Ledge was John F. Folinsbee, a three-times winner of this honor.

House-Art Committee

A catalogue on 4 x 6 inch cards of the entire art collection of The Century was completed during the year. Included were over four hundred items in our categories: paintings, graphics (drawings, prints, water colors), sculpture, and ceramics and other decorative arts. Each catalogue card contains a full description and a 35-mm print of the item. The Club now has a complete record of its artistic holdings, which may be readily expanded as the collection increases. Although primarily for the purpose of record and as an aid to the Committee on Art in locating possessions in the building and on loan, the catalogue will also be a source of information to members.

The following works of art were added to the collection during the year:

Lobsterman's Boats, oil on panel by Ernest Fiene.
The Breakwater, oil on canvas by Julian Levi.

Billiards at The Century, etching by Richard Lahey, gift of the artist.

Long Island Landscape, oil on canvas by Frederick Kost, presented by Oscar R. Houston.

Portrait of Walton Ricketson, pastel on grey paper by E. L. Ipsen, presented by Sherman Baldwin.

Several paintings from the collection were lent to public exhibitions at the request of galleries or museums. Permission was also given to reproduce a number of paintings for scholarly or educational purposes.

Henry S. F. Cooper, Chairman, Committee on Art; Robert Beverly Hale, Chairman, Committee on Exhibitions, Sheldon Keck, Chairman, House-Art Committee.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

The Century collection of Franklin letters, which was for some years on loan to the New York Public Library, has been purchased by the American Philosophical Society and added to its extensive collection of Frankliniana in Philadelphia. The letters, originally acquired by The Century as part of the Graham Collection, deal with the printing press and types owned by Benjamin Franklin while he was living in Passy as minister to France. Addressed to Francis Childs, they include fourteen by Franklin, one by W. T. Franklin, two by John Jay, and one by Philip Freneau. The Committee feels that with the Philosophical Society, where they will be readily available to scholars, they have a safer and more suitable home than The Century could afford them.

Edward Steese, the Century Archivist and a member of the Committee, has presented to the Library a handsome oak display table. A metal plaque records the fact that William Makepeace Thackeray frequently wined and dined at this table, in company with other Centurions, when he was in this country. It is a dining table, originally owned by Centurion Frederick S. Cozzens, a close friend and correspondent of Thackeray's.

The vitrines on the stair landing leading to the Art Gallery are not limited to Library exhibits but a number have been arranged by the librarians during the year, primarily as a reminder of the variety of our holdings. They included exhibits on Caricature and Humor, Self-Portraits Sampled, Autumn Poetry, and Triads of Christmastide.

Statistics for the calendar year 1963 indicate an increasing interest in and use of the Library facilities on the various floors. The small staff was able to render 860 reference and research services, while book circulation came to 159 volumes. Total accessions of books were 653, of which 528 were by purchase and 125 by donation. Century-connected accessions numbered 127. Apart from newspapers, the Library subscribed to 77 periodicals, domestic and foreign, and received 19 gift subscriptions. Our reference resources have been enlarged through the purchase of the Americana and Collier's encyclopedias and through generous gifts of the recent Columbia Encyclopedia and The World Book Encyclopedia Dictionary.

It is again impracticable to list individual donors, since the total of gifts of all kinds came to 144. The Committee wishes, however, to express its appreciation of the generosity and the interest manifested by so many Centurions.

Walter Millis, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

WILLIAM POTTER was chairman of the House Committee through the first part of the year, and the present Committee has been well guided by his counsel. The major problems were the slight, but continuous, falling attendance at meals together with the increase in the cost of labor and materials. Manager Pierre Marchand and his staff deserve applause and thanks for the manner in which they have met these problems and continued to serve excellent meals without any major increase in price.

Our building is far from new, and our engineer, Henry LaPlante, deserves great credit for nursing it along and keeping the seams together. In spite of his efforts, the main drain from the roof burst, causing expensive replacements; and the connections to the hot-water tank fell apart. He has also personally done all the necessary repainting for the year, including the walls and ceiling of the Billiard Room.

Much of the refrigerating apparatus in the kitchen has been replaced, and new air-conditioning window units were installed in the Dining Room and the West Room. The heating and ventilating of the Platt Room have been improved. Broken furniture in the Pool Room has been repaired without losing its somewhat Victorian aspect.

The monthly dinners had an impressive list of speakers. In January, August Hecksher gave us, under the title of "Life, Leisure and the Arts," impressions of his recent trip abroad. In February, Arthur H. Dean explained the complexities of the language situation when negotiating with the Russians. In March, James Flexner took us on a tour of "What we see around us: paintings on The Century's walls." His talk has subsequently been printed and distributed to the members and is a document to be cherished. Leon Edel spoke at the meeting in April on the subject, "The Biographer at Work," followed in May by Alan Pryce-Jones, who gave us a few impressions of the Arts in America, outside New York. As custom dictates, there was no speaker in June, and the members gathered informally to solve the problems of the world.

The new members were greeted in October by an entirely new form of entertainment produced by Walker Cain, Brendan Gill, and Alfred de Liagre, Jr. Against all regulations, but with the permission of the House Committee, kodachrome pictures were taken throughout the Club. Kellum Smith, Jr., posed as the new member and was caught in situations which we have all experienced. The slides were thrown on the screen and comments were made by Messrs. Gill and de Liagre until the Gallery rocked with laughter and applause. The evening will long be remembered.

Henry Moe was again the impresario of the Vintage Festival, after promoting our artist members to decorate, demurely, the Gallery for the Wine Festival in November. The season's meetings ended in December with a talk by Alan Burnham on "New York Landmarks of Richard Morris Hunt," illustrated with slides.

Lewis G. Adams, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

On Saturday afternoon, November 10, 1962, the New York String Sextet played works by Boccherini and Brahms, and the Sextet on Slavic Tunes by Centurion Quincy Porter. Mr. Porter was present to receive the grateful applause of the audience.

On Thursday afternoon, December 18, 1962, the Hamilton College Choir along with its Brass Choir gave a Christmas concert. The program included music for brass by Josquin and Gabrieli, early polyphonic choruses by Praetorius and Byrd, and carols of various nations and periods. After the concert the members and their guests participated in a pleasant Christmas party egged on by Mr. Marchand's excellent nog.

On Saturday, February 16, 1963, Daniel Ericourt played a piano recital of works by Mozart, Chopin, and Debussy.

George Mead, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON HONORS

THE Committee unanimously recommended to the Board of Management that the Century Medal be awarded to President Paul Kieffer, preferably at the Annual meeting of the Association to be held on January 9, 1964. At their meeting on October 23, 1963, the Board of Management unanimously approved the recommendation of the Committee and directed that the Medal be awarded, together with an appropriately engrossed citation reciting the Resolution adopted by the Board.

Gilmore D. Clarke, Chairman

OTHER MATTERS

Amendment to the Constitution. On the recommendation of the Board of Management, the Association, at its Monthly Meeting on April 2, 1964, amended Section 2 of Article VII of the Constitution, to provide for a Monthly Meeting in October, in addition to the other scheduled meetings. (The Section as amended is in this Year-Book.) The purpose is to make it possible for the relatively large number of candidates recommended by the Committee on Admissions, at its June and September Meetings, to be welcomed at a New Members Dinner a month after their election, instead of eleven months later, as has heretofore been the practice. These candidates had been elected at the Association's November Meeting and welcomed as new members the following October. In future, they will be elected at the October Meeting, when the Vintage Festival will be held. The New Members Dinner will be a month later, on the evening of the November Meeting.

Responsibility of the Committee on Literature. The Board of Management enlarged the responsibility of the Committee on Literature by placing it in charge of the Archives of the Association, including the care and preservation of photographs of members and such other photographs as, in the discretion of the Archivist, should be preserved. The Archivist was made, ex-officio, a member of the Committee.

100-Year-Old Members on Exempt List. On the recommendation of the Treasurer, who suggested that it would be gracious and not at all financially dangerous, the Board established the policy of placing a member on the Exempt List when he reached his 100th birthday. The first member so transferred was Walter F. Willcox, who had been elected in 1905 and who reached his 102nd birthday on March 22, 1963.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE
THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

Of the Powers of the Association at Its General Meetings

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No sale, lease, or mortgage of any of the real property of the Association shall be made unless the Board of Management shall authorize such transaction and report its action thereon to the members of the Association and unless, subsequent to the making of such report, such transaction shall be authorized by the concurring vote of at least two-thirds of the members present at a meeting of the members at which at least sixty members are present. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

ARTICLE IV

Of the Board of Management

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from October to May inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

Of Committees and Their Duties

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

Of the Members

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York City. They shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office.

A resident member with the qualifications for non-resident membership may become a non-resident member upon application in writing to the Treasurer. Such member shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 3. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absent members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. In case the return of an absent member shall increase the number in his class of membership above the limit prescribed, no new member in that class shall be elected until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of holding office. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 6. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 7. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred eighty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be ninety dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the

Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 8. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 9. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 10. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

Of Meetings

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of October, November, December, February, March, April, May, and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended April 2, 1964.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

Of Amendments

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Guests and Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the general rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee, and is also subject to the following limitations: prior to three o'clock in the afternoon, a member may introduce only one guest a day, and may not introduce the same person more than twice in the calendar year; after three o'clock, a member may introduce up to three guests a day, and may introduce the same person as often as once a month. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management. A member may not obtain from the House Committee—nor may the Committee grant—such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same person more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(e) Only guests to whom the privileges of the Association are extended under Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution or under paragraph (j) of this By-Law may introduce visitors to the Clubhouse. No guest or visitor may be present at any business meeting of the Association. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association. Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its April meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the June monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the June monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in June, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

HOUSE RULES

1. Admittance to the club-house cannot be claimed after one o'clock A.M.
2. There will be no breakfast on Sundays.
   Week days, breakfast will start at eight o'clock in the morning.
3. Week days, the Dining Room will be closed at nine o'clock in the evening.
4. Sundays, a buffet will be served from one o'clock in the afternoon to eight-thirty o'clock in the evening, except that there will be no restaurant or bar service on Saturdays or Sundays during the summer season.
5. The Bar will be open from noon to midnight except on Sundays and holidays, when it will be open from one o'clock in the afternoon to nine o'clock in the evening.
6. Members will not be admitted inside the Bar at any time.
7. No game of billiards shall be commenced after twelve P.M. on Saturday nights, or after one A.M. on other nights.
8. The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two A.M.

LADIES IN THE CLUBHOUSE

Ladies invited by members of the Association may visit the Art Gallery from 10:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M., either accompanied or unaccompanied by a member. As visitors to the Art Gallery, they may not pass to other parts of the Clubhouse.

Subject on each occasion to the approval of the Chairman of the House Committee or his designee, ladies may attend luncheon, afternoon, or dinner meetings of boards and other committees of non-profit organizations operating in the public interest, provided that such meetings are held in the Medal Room of the Clubhouse. Non-members of the Association attending such meetings may not pass to the upper floors of the Clubhouse.

On special occasions arranged by the Association for Centurions and their guests, such as concerts or literary afternoons, ladies may be permitted to visit the second floor of the Clubhouse.

Except as stated above, ladies may not be admitted to the rooms of the Clubhouse.

Publicity

To avoid the possibility of involving the name of the Association in public controversy, members shall (1) refrain from using the name or the address of the Association in communications intended to be published or printed, (2) take all reasonable precautions to prevent public mention of meetings of any character that are held in the Clubhouse, and (3) assume responsibility for the exclusion from private rooms of reporters and news photographers on assignment.

Business Conferences

Members discussing business in the Clubhouse are requested to confine such conferences as far as possible to the Association's private rooms. They should refrain from laying out business papers in the common rooms of the Clubhouse.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

CENTURY MEMORIALS

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY ROGER BURLINGAME

Historian of the ASSOCIATION

Howel Henry Barnes, Junior

Howel Barnes was an international engineer who eventually became an executive of one of the largest American electric companies. A native New Yorker, Barnes was, however, educated at Stuttgart Polytechnicum in Germany from which he graduated in 1897. He was then associated with Siemens and Halske in Berlin. Thence he went, in 1899, to Mexico City where he was superintendent of the Mexican Electric Works and remained there until 1902.

At Pittsfield, Massachusetts, an industrial corporation, the Stanley Electric Manufacturing Company, was, in 1902, the predecessor of the General Electric Company's plant there. Barnes was invited to be its staff engineer, and he later became its manager. Barnes's move to G.E. was, therefore, a natural one, and he was appointed engineer of the New York District in 1908.

In 1927, he gave up all technical work and devoted his attention to the executive department. Three years later he was elected commercial vice-president. He retired at the end of 1941.

Howel Barnes was a Fellow of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and, for two years, its vice-president. He was a trustee of the United Engineering Society of New York and chairman of its building committee. He also was a member and past chairman of the Hoover Medal Board of Awards.

Van Wyck Brooks

The immense amount that has been said and written about Van Wyck the author has submerged the too little told about Van Wyck the person. But another Centurion author wrote to the Historian: "I began to feel a personal affection for him. It seemed to me that he was a man who changed very little through the years. Even his bristly haircut and his mustache, although the years grizzled them, remained the same. I found a sweetness and innocence about his character, rare in men of letters who usually belong to the genus irritabile vates."

Whatever turbulence was within—and we know that there was often much—his outward presence suggested serenity, peace of mind, and the constant impulse of giving. Those of us who knew him slightly soon felt that we knew him well. There was no aloofness of greatness about Van Wyck: he was one of us all.

A phrase in a Times editorial, applied to a specific writing, might be used for much of his critical work: "a magic merger of erudition and eloquence." Above all it is rich. One is always aware of substance made digestible by ease of expression and restraint of humor. What he has written must be read slowly, with leisure to look down the side vistas he opens and feel the surprise at what one sees there. As a critic, he always looks directly at what he undertakes to appraise, not at its reflection in some mirror of vogue or epoch; there is no obscurity in his writing because there has been none in his own mind. We know that he has felt his subject deeply before he has set down a word. What he has written about New England, for instance, derives as much from what has been absorbed from Yankee soil into his blood and bone as from his reading.

Early in his life, Van Wyck discovered that the dynamo from which he was to gain his energy was in his native America. He was in Harvard at a time when it was the fashion for American writers to believe they must work abroad in the midst of an elder, and supposedly richer, culture. Following the fashion, he tried Europe, knew almost at once "that a man without a country could do nothing of importance, that writers must draw sustenance from their own common flesh and blood." In sudden revulsion against expatriates, he came home. He was a pioneer, then, in turning the eyes of American students, teachers, and readers toward the indigenous culture. As Centurion Malcolm Cowley wrote in the Saturday Review, "Brooks had more to do with creating the new attitude than anyone in the country."

Here he was working not only for himself but for other authors. By example and by explanation, he showed them that there was a continuity stemming from American tradition of which they must make themselves a part. Only thus could they hope to become great writers. Incidentally he gave this definition, acutely characteristic: "a great writer is a great man writing." Van Wyck was a great man first.

Van Wyck Brooks was born in Plainfield, New Jersey, in 1886. His record in public schools showed him to be what we now call a "gifted child." He entered Harvard in 1904 in the class of '08 and completed the four-year liberal arts course in three years. After graduating, he spent a year and a half in London and two years teaching in California. His first critical work was The Wine of the Puritans on American authors. He then translated many books from the French. His first great success was The Flowering of New England in 1936, which won him the Pulitzer Prize. This was followed, four years later, by New England: Indian Summer. In the 1920s, however, he did what were later thought to be some of his most illuminating works; these were The Ordeal of Mark Twain, The Pilgrimage of Henry James, and Emerson and Others.

In the decade of the 1920s, he settled in Westport, Connecticut, which was then becoming a sort of writer's colony. Many years later, in 1957, he published Days of the Phoenix, in which he wrote about his friend writers in Westport and, too, about the Connecticut Yankees. The writers included Sherwood Anderson, Robert Frost, Scott Fitzgerald, and Paul Rosenfeld. "They were drawn," Van Wyck wrote, "to the pretty villages and the old farmhouses that were built by faithful craftsmen a century before,—two centuries in many cases, or nearly three,—master carpenters working in a fine tradition, following Palladian manuals of the colonial time." He was quick to recognize his fellow "faithful craftsmen."

Later, Van Wyck settled in Bridgewater, an unspoiled Connecticut town further inland than Westport. There he lived out his life.

He loved The Century, Centurions loved him, and he will be sorely missed for a long time.

Louis Brownlow

"A passion for anonymity" was the phrase "Brownie" minted when he spoke of the qualities necessary for an intimate adviser to the President of the United States. Whether in the private corners of the White House the various Presidents he advised called him Brownie, his friends all did, and the nickname is an indication of their affection for him. In his informal office he consistently followed his preachment in evading the personal publicity that inevitably threatens so important a person.

An editorial in the Washington Post called the monument to Brownlow's memory the Executive Office of the President "which is now the nerve center of our Federal establishment but which did not exist before 1939." He was head of a committee that advocated transferring the Bureau of the Budget from the Treasury Department into this expanded office which, as the Post remarked, "would enable the President to govern his own government." It was during Franklin Roosevelt's administration that the change was made.

Louis Brownlow had long experience in public service. Trained as a journalist, he had the power of penetrating analysis and a flair for giving his findings adequate and appealing expression. He was a pioneer in city management. From the District of Columbia Commission on which he served under Woodrow Wilson he went on to become city manager of Petersburg, Virginia. In both positions he put through important administrative reforms. He was always a champion of home rule for Washington.

He was born in Buffalo, Missouri, in 1879. His education was informal, but his parents taught him well at home. His journalistic career began on the Nashville Banner in 1900. He was a reporter there and on the Louisville Courier-Journal and then city editor of the Louisville Times. Until 1905, he worked as correspondent or editor of the Nashville Banner and the Paducah News-Democrat. From 1906 to 1915, he was special writer and foreign correspondent for the Haskin syndicate.

In Chicago, he established the Public Administration Clearing House, a center for the exchange of information on governments between agencies and officials and university departments of political science.

His autobiography (in our library) is in two volumes: the first entitled A Passion for Politics, the second A Passion for Anonymity. His talk, full of anecdotes, entertained Centurions whenever he was able to come to New York.

Harvey Hollister Bundy

Most of us remember the evening we celebrated the election to honorary membership of Henry Lewis Stimson. The occasion was no less moving because it was also gay. The speakers were Stimson's friends and associates: Dwight Eisenhower, John Davis, and Harvey Bundy. Bundy told some stories about the Secretary fishing for trout in Europe in the wartime; stories that made some of us say to one another, "Is this the man that has been called 'dry and stiff'?" Surely that warm evening in The Century he was anything but, and those who met him then for the first time found him responsive and engaging. But a Centurion who had known him well for a long time has explained that Harvey Bundy could be extremely dry and stiff to those who tried to persuade him to compromise with his principles or betray a confidence.

This same friend speaks of him as a "Bostonian not born in Boston." Coming from the Midwest, he surprised those who supposed that rigid adherence to principle is an exclusive Boston characteristic. But Harvey Bundy combined rectitude and charity in a way that was entirely his own and had nothing to do with background or environment.

He was born in Grand Rapids, Michigan, in 1888. He graduated with high honors from Yale in 1909 and took his law degree at the Harvard Law School in 1914. As top man in his Harvard class, he won appointment to the post of secretary to United States Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. In 1915, he began the practice of law in Boston, and, except for his service in various government posts, he continued as a member of the Boston law firm of Choate, Hall and Stewart. During the First World War, he was assistant counsel for the United States Food Administration. In 1931, he was appointed Assistant Secretary of State, a post he held for the remainder of the Hoover administration. This service was under Secretary of State Henry Stimson, and when, in 1941, Stimson became Franklin Roosevelt's Secretary of War, he asked that Bundy be made Assistant Secretary. This post Bundy held during the war years; in it, he was the confidential adviser of Stimson and had constant communication with army and navy, the Office of Strategic Services, and the diplomatic corps.

After the war, Bundy was chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, succeeding Centurion John Foster Dulles.

Harvey Bundy was head of a most distinguished family. "As a progenitor," a Centurion friend writes, "he must be set down as one of the most successful in the history of the republic.... I was simply overwhelmed when I went up to the apartment after the funeral. I sat looking at that wealth of handsome humanity thinking how Harvey would have hated the noise and the clatter but how proud he would have been at the same time of the character and brains of all shapes, sizes, sexes and ages."

Frederic Edgar Camp

Fred Camp once wrote to a fellow Centurion who had asked him to "break bread" with him at The Century:

"Please be assured that you conferred on me an honor equal only to the President's reception of the Queen of England."

In later life, Fred rarely went out except with a friend because his affliction of multiple sclerosis inhibited his power of speech and he hesitated to embarrass those he might meet. This was characteristic of his sensitive ways and of the modesty which always accompanied his wide philanthropic activities. The extent and direction of his gifts can never be known, but the knowledge of the generosity of such an anonymous giver spreads, and we know that he was such a one.

Primarily an educator, Frederic Camp was first headmaster of two widely known preparatory schools, then assistant to the dean of Princeton, and, finally, dean of the Stevens Institute of Technology. In the time that was left after these tasks, he was an ardent yachtsman and the Number One citizen of the community of Blueberry Hill, Maine. In the affairs of this town, he took an active and useful interest from the mid-1930s.

Born in New York in 1905, after his father's death, Fred Camp was educated in Philadelphia schools and in Princeton from which he graduated with the class of 1928. He was invited to become assistant to Dean Christian Gauss of Princeton and remained with Centurion Gauss for six years. He then became headmaster of the Evans School at Tucson, Arizona. Two years later, he became headmaster of Chestnut Hill Academy at Philadelphia. In 1941, he succeeded Franklin Furman as dean of Stevens Institute, a position for which, said President Davis of the Institute, he was peculiarly fitted because of his "long experience in studying human beings and human relationships, which is not only the proper work of a Dean, but also the hardest and most important part of the work of an engineer." This opinion of President Davis might well be noted by all whose aim is to educate engineers.

He continued in this post until, in 1946, his illness deprived him of the use of both legs. Always alert of mind and enthusiastic in whatever activities were left to him, he continued his philanthropic and civic work with courage and surprising vigor. Even after he could no longer sail himself, he made cruises on Diesel yachts, always deploring the fact that he must rely on artificial power rather than the wind he grew up to.

In 1941, Frederic Camp created the Blue Hill Foundation. In twenty years, the Foundation made grants aggregating $340,299.57. Yet, so well were the finances administered that at the end of the period, after all grants and expenses, the net worth of the Foundation was over $50,000 more than the donated capital.

Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler

The large "Chanler clan" has always been closely identified with New York: in it are some of the city's oldest families. Stuyve, as his friends called him, lived and worked much abroad, commuting, as it were, between New York, London, and Paris—a banker and international money expert in all three. He went to school at Eton and to college at Harvard and rowed on the varsity crews of both. When he graduated from college in 1914, he thought he would like to be an architect, and the late honorary Centurion Billy Delano gave him a job in his office where he was instrumental in the design of the Colony Club and of the Otto Kahn house. But the First World War interrupted his architectural career, and when he came home a major of field artillery his ambition had changed, and he worked at banking for the rest of his life.

So, because of his English affiliations and because he was fluent in French and German, he represented the International Acceptance Bank in London and, later, the Bank of Manhattan there. But, because he wanted his children to grow up as Americans, he gave up his important English post and came back to New York. Here he became manager of the New York agency of the Société Générale of France. He retired two years ago.

He was an amateur of music, being proficient both as a pianist and cellist. He was an ardent member of a group called, by the late Centurion Larry White, the "Octomaniacs" because they met monthly to play eight hands on two pianos. When he retired to Rhinebeck, he spent much time with the cello, playing and taking lessons.

His activity in the Knickerbocker Club of which he was president took most of his club time, and we did not see him at The Century as much as we should have liked.

He was a shy fellow, and though his acquaintances were many his intimates were few. Of him, a Centurion classmate—Harvard, 1914—writes:

"He had a magnificent sense of humor. I would say that it was more of an English sense of humor than American. He loved understatement and seldom raised his voice for emphasis. He would let a wonderful story or anecdote or phrase roll quietly out and watch from his twinkling, pale blue eyes to see if you were going to catch it."

Gordon Rufus Clapp

A tribute in a Teheran newspaper published soon after his death concluded with the statement "Gordon Clapp—a tall, decent and great American, left a lighted path behind him as he reached the end of his journey." The article told of his contributions to an immense project in a desert valley in Iran; an enterprise that has been called the Iranian T.V.A. Through the valley ran the uncontrolled River Dez; largely through Clapp's effort, the river was tamed and the dry, parched land turned into green fields and pastures. Like the Tennessee Valley system, the Dez project plans with its fourteen dams to turn the destructive force of the river into creative energy.

In this undertaking, Gordon Clapp was associated with Centurion David Lilienthal, whom he had succeeded as director of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Soon after the expiration of his term in 1954, Clapp joined Lilienthal in the newly formed Development and Resources Corporation, and it is this organization that is carrying on the large project in Iran.

Gordon Clapp was born in Ellsworth, Wisconsin, in 1905. He graduated from Lawrence College in Appleton, in 1927, and for six years remained at the college as director of admissions and assistant dean. At its inception in 1933, he became T.V.A.'s assistant director of personnel. After service as personnel director and general manager, he was appointed chairman when Lilienthal left to head the Atomic Energy Commission.

Clapp was peculiarly adapted to personnel work because of his uncommon capacity for getting along with all sorts and conditions of men. His friendliness, tolerance, and humor combined with great ingenuity to reach the heart of labor controversies. To him, in good part, can be attributed the remarkably advanced and solid relations of T.V.A. with the various bodies of organized labor that worked for it.

When, in 1954, President Eisenhower failed to reappoint him, he served for more than a year as New York's Deputy City Administrator. In this post, he acted as liaison between the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity and the Department of Health with special reference to water fluoridation. He was interested, too, in slum clearance and housing and made important contributions to the administration of the city's personnel system.

At various times in his career, Clapp served as chairman of the committee on employee relations in public service of the Civil Service Assembly, a member of the President's Advisory Committee on Education, and chairman of the United Nations Commission for Economic Survey of the Middle East. He was a trustee of the American University at Beirut, a member of the American Society of Public Administration, and editor of the Public Administration Review. He was the author of The T.V.A.: An Approach to the Development of a Region.

His was an untimely death at fifty-seven, when the promise of much international service lay ahead of him. He will be long remembered as a truly devoted public servant; modest despite his keen intellect, vigorous imagination, and the brilliant achievements that those qualities made possible.

He was with us far too briefly, but he is in the company of The Century's most distinguished immortals.

Charles Edward Clark

Lawyer, teacher, law-school dean, and federal judge, Charles Edward Clark has been described, professionally, as "the principal architect of the Federal rules of procedure" who "led the way in liberalizing the judicial process and making our court machinery more efficient, inexpensive and useful." This is the judgment of Judge J. Edward Lumbard, chief judge of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. Judge Lumbard added that Clark "was one of the truly great men of the law in this country." Of his death, he said: "He left the scene as he would have wished, in the thick of the fight, with all banners flying." Personally, he was known as genial, kind, and understanding.

As a native of Connecticut, most of Judge Clark's life and career was closely identified with the state. He graduated from Yale College in 1911 and took his law degree from the Yale Law School two years later. After six years of private practice, he joined the law school faculty and, in 1929, was appointed Sterling Professor of Law. In the same year, he became dean of the Yale Law School. Ten years later, President Franklin Roosevelt appointed him a federal judge. Although he retired, then, from Yale, he kept a constant interest in its law school and was frequently a visiting lecturer there.

As a judge, his main interest has been the improvement of court procedure. He fought for, and finally saw established, a simplified court system in Connecticut and there, too, he raised the standard of quality in judges.

Judge Clark was awarded honorary degrees from several colleges and universities including a doctorate of laws from Yale. In the Yale ceremony, he was cited by the late Centurion A. Whitney Griswold as "the architect of the Connecticut Circuit Court System." He was the author of Code Pleading, Real Covenants, and Cases on Pleading and Procedure.

William de Krafft

Orvil Eugene Dryfoos

When a man dies at fifty, his friends and colleagues look for pressures that may have broken him. The men and women who had worked with Orvil Dryfoos on the New York Times looked back to the newspaper strike. When it was over, Orv went away for a rest. He never came back.

It was not the mere suspension of the paper to which he was wholly devoted that this publisher found most unbearable. It was worry about the people who had been forced out through lack of work and about those who, remaining, were overworked, and about the cuts in pay that everyone had to take. Such things are not commonly the first concern of a hard-boiled newspaper publisher when a strike comes. But night after night they kept Orvil awake. "He was a human being," said an associate, "as human a being as I have ever known."

"I just can't go through with it," he said the morning after a letter to the employees had been written, but not sent, prescribing a 50 percent cut, "I can't ask people to take a cut like that. How would they all manage?" So he rewrote the letter changing the 50 percent to 20 percent. "We will make out somehow," he said.

Orvil Dryfoos had gone about his job so quietly, with so little personal fanfare that many of us in the outside world did not know much about him. He was the publisher of the Times, sure enough; his name was on the masthead. So we were surprised at the immense outpouring of grief at his death from men and women over the country and abroad—grief not at the death of an important public figure but at the departure of a friend. No one—not his close associates—knew of the remote corners of society into which his friendship had reached. From the President and members of his cabinet; from senators and congressmen, ambassadors, clergymen, editors and writers, from compositors and pressmen, stenographers, elevator operators and janitors, the messages poured in.

Dryfoos was born in New York in 1912, graduated from Horace Mann School in 1930 and from Dartmouth College in 1934. After three years with a New York brokerage firm, he bought a seat on the Stock Exchange. In 1941, he was persuaded by his father-in-law, Arthur Hays Sulzberger, to join the staff of the New York Times. After more than a year as cub reporter and on the make-up desk, he was appointed assistant to the publisher, Mr. Sulzberger. After serving as vice-president and president of the Times Company, he became publisher on Mr. Sulzberger's retirement in 1961.

Although in his office he was known as a "worrier," he was a genial man who loved life and the company of friends and could often temporarily forget his worries in the appreciation of good food. On his travels he would seek out strange, exotic foods native to the countries he visited—even stopping at the pushcarts of street vendors to taste some new delicacy. In New York, he was a champion of street cleanliness, and in his long walks through the city would stop to pick up bits of litter that annoyed him. Daily, he walked from his home in Eighty-second Street to his Times office, going usually through the park of which he knew every corner.

It is a pity that his time as a Centurion was so short that many of us had no chance to meet him. He was the sort of person we would have enjoyed; informal, outgiving, interested in every humanist department—including, and especially, people.

William Lusk Webster Field

A school, said Will Field, after forty-two years as teacher and headmaster at Milton Academy, "must change all the time. If you ever come back and find it exactly as you left it the year before you will know there is something wrong with it. If you ever miss something that you used to think was one of its leading characteristics, at least you had better stop and ask yourself should it be a lasting characteristic or was it just a stepping stone to something still better." The tendency of an old school, he thought, was to "bask in its traditions" to the point of forgetting the "forward look."

Surely Milton, in the long span of Field's work there, was put to the test. Never in the history of American education has there been as much change in so short a time as in the first forty years of the twentieth century. With the pressures of vocational emphasis, of Progressive formulas, of accelerating war programs, and of modern aptitude considerations, the headmaster was constantly forced to keep a balance between enough change and too much. It is here, Miltonians believe, that William Field achieved his most significant educational results. His wisdom and skill alternating between the push ahead and the measured restraint kept the academic course straight and sure.

In a tribute from Milton's trustees published when Field retired, meetings were recalled at which he resolved conflicting views. There were, they said, "many occasions when, as the proposed policies were approaching a dead end, a quiet figure would rise to sum up the situation, find a way out of the difficulty, and suggest measures in which theories and facts harmonized to a happy solution. Those present would marvel at the well-chosen words, packed with ideas and built upon years of thought and experience. In an age of streamlined rapidity he has kept his balance; in a period of change he has held to the essentials. But he has never missed a new idea that possessed value." One striking comment by the trustees remarked on the headmaster's "close study of each individual pupil on a personal as well as a personnel basis."

William Lusk Webster Field was born in Milton, Massachusetts, in 1876. For six years he was a student at Milton Academy. A classmate recalled that, during these years, "I used to watch Will sitting there in class with his ears aquiver, and we did not realize that he was hearing things that were beyond us, that he was hearing music in another sphere." At Harvard, Field took a special course in the Lawrence Scientific School and, beginning in 1900, he taught biology and geography at Milton. He became headmaster in 1917. On his retirement in 1942, he was made headmaster emeritus. He was a former president of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Headmasters Association, and the Harvard Teachers Association.

Though he was not able, during his thirty-seven years as a Centurion, to be often at the Club, he greatly cherished his membership and took a constant interest in our doings.

Claude Moore Fuess

To be headmaster of one of the oldest and most important boys' preparatory schools in the country and, at the same time, a diligent and highly productive author is a combination that would tax the endurance and resourcefulness of many men. It is said that "Jack" Fuess, as his friends called him, got up each morning at the break of day, worked at his writing till ten, then shifted into the exigent job of running an academy. To go suddenly, and on a regular schedule, from the loneliness of authorship into the gregarious whirlpool of an educational institution must have taken a mental flexibility enviable indeed —not to mention an uncommon self-discipline.

But Fuess was successful in both tasks. His books were varied and well received. Biography was his main interest, but he also wrote juvenile fiction based on his school experience. As head of Phillips Andover Academy, he was both efficient and popular; he was especially liked and admired as a teacher. He had wit and tact, two qualities that ease work with boys, and an infectious eagerness for learning that the students quickly caught.

The subjects of Fuess's biographies include Daniel Webster, Caleb Cushing, Carl Schurz, Rufus Choate, and Calvin Coolidge. He also wrote many biographical articles for the Dictionary of American Biography.

Claude Fuess was born in Waterville, New York, in 1885, graduated from Amherst College in 1905, took his master's degree at Columbia in 1906 and his Ph.D., in 1912, also at Columbia. He went to Andover in 1908 as instructor in English and stayed there for forty years, becoming headmaster in 1933. In the course of his career as writer and educator, he received seven honorary degrees.

He was celebrated as an after-dinner speaker and was chosen toastmaster at innumerable dinners. His suspended humor was irresistible.

His membership in The Century extended over a span of more than thirty years.

Herbert Spencer Gasser

The late trend is toward teamwork in scientific research. The various disciplines have become interdependent, and it is rare that one person is sufficiently knowledgeable in them all to be able to perform experiments which require an understanding of several special branches. Research in neurology, for example, has come to need a knowledge of electronics as well as biology, physiology, and other scientific subjects. Recognition of the reaction of nerve fibers to electrical impulses and of the minute electric signs of nerve messages is essential today. But Gasser was never content to leave such things to specialists. He insisted on an intimate personal knowledge of every area which his investigation might enter. He has been described as a "lonely worker." He had studied so deeply in every related field that there was no experiment in his neurological research that he was unable to perform alone. And the new rapid evolution of science never left him behind in the constant continuation of this study. Nor did medical science confine him. His inquiring mind explored the humanistic realm as well: indeed it was said of him that "he did not recognize a distinction between humanist and scientist."

It took such a man to fill the shoes of the celebrated Simon Flexner as director of the Rockefeller Institute. His colleagues were not surprised that he won the Nobel Prize in physiology or that he was awarded the Kober Medal of the Association of American Physicians.

Herbert Gasser was born in Plattsville, Wisconsin. He was educated at the Plattsville State Normal School and the University of Wisconsin. He took his M.D. degree at Johns Hopkins University in 1915. He was an instructor in pharmacology at Wisconsin and in physiology at Washington University. In the First World War he served as a pharmacologist in the Chemical Warfare Service.

From Washington University he went as professor of physiology to the Cornell University Medical College in 1941. He became director of the Rockefeller Institute in 1935 and remained in that position until his retirement in 1953. He won the Nobel Prize in 1944 and the Kober Medal ten years later.

He was a member of many societies including the National Academy of Science, the Royal Society of London, the British Physiological Society, the Royal Academy of Medicine of Belgium, the Royal Swedish Academy of Science, the Finnish Academy of Sciences, the Medical Association of Argentina, and the Academia delle Scienze dell'Istituto of Bologna.

He was a friendly man and loyal to his friends. The teachers of his youth remained his lifelong companions; they gave him continuing inspiration and he rewarded them by drawing them with him into his varied fields of interest outside their profession and his.

He was a Centurion for a quarter century.

Philip Leslie Graham

The tragic death of Philip Graham at forty-eight cut short what the New York Times called "the expanding career of a man of brilliant mind and enormous dynamism. . . ." The Washington Post, of which he was president and executive officer, said in an editorial, "Mr. Graham invested the full capacity of his mind and heart in anything that deeply moved and interested him. He was not a person given to qualified commitments to his country, his enterprise, or his friends." And President Kennedy, on learning of his death, issued this statement:

"The death of Philip Graham . . . is a personal loss to me and all his friends. He was a distinguished publisher, a man whose quiet and effective leadership contributed so much to his community and nation."

He came into journalism from the law. It has been said that knowledge of the law is a good foundation for any professional career; perhaps that is one reason why Graham was so good at his adopted calling. But according to his statement, made to a group of the editors and correspondents of Newsweek, a reason for his switch was:

"I am insatiably anxious about the state of our world. I revel in the recitation of the daily and weekly grist of journalism."

Philip Leslie Graham was born in Terry, South Dakota, in 1915. During his childhood, his parents moved to Florida where he was educated at Miami High School and the University of Florida. At the Harvard Law School, he was editor of the Law Review and graduated magna cum laude. He was then law clerk successively to Justices Stanley Reed and Felix Frankfurter, both of the Supreme Court. In the Second World War, he enlisted as a private in the Army Air Corps and was discharged as a major attached to the intelligence staff of the Far East Air Force.

He was then asked by his father-in-law, the late Eugene Meyer, to become associate publisher of the Washington Post. A year later he was its publisher. Under his guidance, the Post acquired its rival, the Times-Herald controlled by the late Colonel McCormick. Immediately, the Post's circulation rose, and it became one of the country's leading newspapers. In 1961, Graham engineered the transfer of the controlling stock of Newsweek from the Vincent Astor Foundation to the Post company.

Last summer he suffered a severe breakdown and, while under the care of a psychiatrist, shot himself.

"Our sense of loss," concluded the Post editorial, "is total, he was a man neither easily forgotten nor found again."

Howard Greenley

If you came into the East Room at noon and saw Howard sitting there the day began anew. For however heavy your troubles, however grouchy your mood, Howard would pull you away into the view of happy and exciting things outside yourself. It was, of course, his brilliant imagination, tempered by a sense of extra-dry humor, that made him so successful in his profession. His profession was architecture, but he was celebrated for a special kind of architecture—one that demanded a quick dramatic sense. This was the scenic architecture of the theatre and the design of expositions and pageants. Such enterprise as the International Silk Shows, the International French Exposition, and many Beaux-Arts balls were among his masterpieces.

The Century often drew Howard into the orbits of its celebrations. The background for his contribution to these was his early association with Centurions Austin Strong, Theodore Steinway, and Henry Smith in the Amateur Comedy Club. He was, indeed, closely associated with Centurions in most of his professional and amateur activities. At the École des Beaux-Arts in Paris, he shared an atelier with Billy Delano. There, too, he was a member of a group which included Centurions Walter Damrosch, Francis Rogers, Lloyd Warren, and Ernest Peixotto—a group that assisted American students in conjunction with the French Ministry of the Fine Arts.

Howard Greenley was born in Ithaca in 1874. In late years, he spoke of himself as the only Centurion extant who visited the Philadelphia Centennial of 1876 in a perambulator. He graduated with honors from Trinity College in Hartford in 1894. On graduation, Centurion Stanford White advised him: "Go into an architect's office, in any lowly capacity—see if you like it . . . then go to Paris." Howard went into the drafting room of Carrère and Hastings, in New York, liked it and went to Paris in 1897. "No European war clouds," he remembered, "the franc was worth 20 cents and 4,000 of them enabled one to live in affluence for a year, including travel."

After his return to the U.S., he practiced architecture under his own name for nearly thirty years, designing hotels, office buildings, schools, and interiors. In the First World War, he served as an officer of the Naval Air Forces Reserve. He retired from active practice in 1935, but he never retired from vital constructive activity. He continued his participation in the American Committee for the Fontainebleau Summer Schools of Music and the Fine Arts, of which he had been a charter member. He taught in the fine arts at Trinity College. During the Second World War, he was president pro-tem of the Fine Arts Federation of New York and later a member of the Art Commission of New York City and a Trustee of New York's French Institute.

He was Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor and a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects.

We are grateful for his fifteen years of membership in our association, and we shall miss him from our clubhouse.

Alfred Whitney Griswold

"Books won't stay banned," said Whit Griswold. "They won't burn. Ideas won't go to jail. In the long run of history, the censor and the inquisitor have always lost." These words, spoken in revolt against legislated conformity may well set an example to all presidents of universities. Yale did not conform to any trend or custom when it picked Whit Griswold to head it. He was not chosen for a gift of fund-raising nor for an aptitude in juggling educational formulas. He did not have to persuade men to endow Yale. The fact that he was there, that his university had prospered, educationally, under his guidance was enough. And the breadth, the depth, of his own education made him reject the makings of a blueprint for teaching.

Above all, Whitney Griswold cherished freedom. He had no use for oaths proclaiming the loyalty of an individual to institutions or ideas. He believed that any pledge or creed that restricted the mind's impulse to explore, thwarted true education. He was brave enough to say these things and keep saying them when other men who knew the truth were scared to speak.

He was aware of the difference between education and instruction when he said that it was the job of a university "not to teach businessmen business or grammarians grammar" but rather "to awaken and develop the intellectual and spiritual powers in the individual before he enters his chosen career." It is especially significant in these years when so many young people are devoting all their energies to catching up with the advances in science, that Griswold warned them to take time and effort to learn about the human society that science serves. As a preamble to his reform of the engineering curriculum at Yale, he stated: "Since the engineer is concerned with social objectives, he must know the society that creates those objectives. . . ." Thus the student would be led to keep, parallel with his technical learning, exploration into the social sciences and humanities.

Alfred Whitney Griswold was born in Morristown, New Jersey, in 1906. His secondary education was at Hotchkiss. He graduated from Yale College in 1929 and took his Ph.D. there four years later. At that time, he was instructor in Yale's history department. In 1938, his book Far Eastern Policy of the United States was published. The research for his next book, Farming and Democracy, which he carried on under a Guggenheim fellowship, took him five years and publication came in 1948. Meanwhile he had advanced through assistant and associate professorships in history and government.

He was chosen to succeed Dr. Charles Seymour in 1950. Certain Yale alumni expressed surprise that a scholar rather than a money-raiser had been picked—especially at a time when the university needed endowments. In the next ten years, however, the endowment fund was nearly multiplied by three, suggesting that scholarship as well as persuasion and public relations attracts donors.

Whit Griswold was a gay and witty companion. He had histrionic gifts which made his lectures popular. It was his custom to mimic certain historical figures, thus bringing them almost visibly into the classroom.

When he died, untimely, at fifty-six, the New York Times wrote, editorially, that his death was "a loss to the nation, even more than it is a loss to Yale."

Chauncey J. Hamlin

The fascinating subject of museums occupied most of the attention and much of the career of Chauncey Hamlin. But his interests ranged far and wide into the law, politics, and the stock market. His main political activity was as champion of Theodore Roosevelt's Progressive ("Bull Moose") Party when, in 1912, it campaigned against both Republicans and Democrats. A Centurion friend remembers driving with "T.R." and Hamlin in an open car from Rochester to Snyder, a suburb of Buffalo, to a conference held in Hamlin's "beautiful home" there. Hamlin's interest in the Bull Moose Party was intense and continued even after its defeat by Woodrow Wilson. Its activity then was mainly in New York State.

A native of Buffalo, Hamlin was educated at Yale College in 1903 and took his law degree at Buffalo Law School in 1905. Until 1912, he practiced in Buffalo. In 1909, he was appointed federal referee in bankruptcy for the Western District of New York. In 1914, he ran unsuccessfully for lieutenant governor on the Progressive ticket.

He went to the Mexican border in 1916 as an artillery officer with the New York National Guard. Two years later he was in France as brigade munitions officer of the 52nd Field Artillery.

At war's end, he was elected vice-president of the board of managers of the American Association of Museums. At the same time he was attracted to the development of state parks and did much creative work in connection with Allegany State Park and served as a chairman of the park's commission.

In the Second World War, Hamlin was chairman of the Niagara Frontier Defense Committee, and, when the war was over, he became chairman of the Justice for Greece Committee which presented Greece's case against the Axis before the Paris Peace Conference. In the same year, he was elected president of the International Council of Museums.

Meanwhile, he had been a partner in several brokerage firms and was also a member of the New York Stock Exchange.

Throughout his life, he was devoted to the ideal of civic betterment in his native State.

Henry G. Hotchkiss

Aldous Leonard Huxley

This brilliant author, whose thought ranged over a wider panorama than perhaps any English literary figure of his time, hoped, as a boy, to follow in the footsteps of his famous grandfather and devote his life to science. His was, after all, a scientific family. His brother Julian is a biologist, and a half brother, Andrew, won the Nobel Prize for psychology. But the failure of his eyes at seventeen, when he was ready to plunge into the intense study of medicine, stopped him. Yet, in one way, he did follow Thomas Huxley who wrote so lucidly, so exuberantly, and with such sharp imagery that he was able to bring the theory of evolution to the understanding of millions who might otherwise have known only distorted reflections of Darwin's discoveries.

Yet, in spite of his handicap, his grandson was able to profit by the scientific environment he lived in and by inherited virtues. With all his creative, often fanciful, imagination and his occasional excursions into mysticism, he could view people and things in clear objectivity. It was this clarity of vision that made his satire so deadly. Because he saw, too, the distorted relation of things and people to one another, he revealed many a disturbing truth, many a bitter paradox.

His most celebrated, if not his best, novel, Brave New World, showed the depth of his thinking about science and, especially, about the social lag behind a headlong scientific-industrial progress. It has, of course, been compared with the prophetic novels of Wells, but to many readers—young readers especially—it presented an uglier nightmare. Huxley had, at one time, an immense vogue among youth, even adolescents. His early novels brought a delighted shock to boys and girls; "he was a liberator," Jocelyn Brooke remarked, "who seemed to encourage us in our adolescent revolt against the standards of our parents. He was witty, immensely intelligent, unfailingly up to date and occasionally (by the standards of those days) outrageously bawdy. . . ." (The Listener, London, December 12, 1963.)

Huxley was born in 1894 in Godalming, Surrey. In spite of his partial blindness, he graduated with First Class Honors from Oxford. He then joined the editorial staff of the London literary magazine The Athenaeum. His first published novel, Crome Yellow, appeared in 1921 and was hailed for its gaiety and its economy of words. Then, after a collection of stories, came Antic Hay, thought by some in 1923 to be obscene though today's critics say it would hardly raise an eyebrow. Huxley's best known works are Those Barren Leaves, Point Counter Point, Eyeless in Gaza, Time Must Have a Stop, After Many a Summer, and Ape and Essence. Altogether, he published some forty novels and many essays, plays, and poems.

He hated the English climate and lived in places where he could get the maximum of sun. California has been his home of late years, and he has not come often to New York to give us the pleasure of his company at The Century.

Roy Childs Jones

"Those who can, do," someone inaccurately said; "those who can't, teach." Roy Jones did both and so, in all professions, the best of us do. No one who teaches in the arts and sciences without a background of practice is scarcely worth his salt. With it, he can teach not only the theory of his subject but its earthy aspects. Thus he passes on to others all that he has learned the hard way.

"Although he was a gifted architect, Mr. Jones was first of all a teacher of architecture."

So read an obituary note from Roy's school, the University of Minnesota. One might well substitute the word "because," instead of the word "although" in the paragraph.

Centurion Jones was born in 1885, in Kendallville, Indiana. He was educated at Purdue University and took his master's degree in architecture at the University of Pennsylvania in 1914. Like many of our members, his first professional work was in the New York offices of McKim, Mead and White.

To a great extent, his practice ran parallel with his teaching. From 1910 to 1913, he was instructor in architecture at the University of Illinois. He joined the University of Minnesota faculty soon after its Department of Architecture was established. Twenty years later, he was promoted to a professorship. Meanwhile, he served as chief designer for the St. Paul firm of Taltz, King and Day. He was the architect for many structures in St. Paul.

In 1936, he was made university advisory architect and, in the next fifteen years, supervised the development of the campuses and arranged the schedule of construction. His best known design was that of the Memorial Stadium.

In the Second World War, Roy Jones served with the Army Engineers in France, in the camouflage section.

He was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects and a former president of Collegiate Schools of Architecture. One of his avocations was a study of American railroads.

Alan Goodrich Kirk

From the bridge of a lowly L.S.T., an officer whose job was landing soldiers looked up and saw, on a high point of the Augusta, the admiral who was directing a large part of the Normandy invasion in June, 1944. He had nothing but admiration for this great man who commanded the immense operation, but it never occurred to him that, one day, he might become the admiral's friend.

But after the war, this Centurion became a neighbor of the admiral's daughter and through her met his hero who turned out not as remote as he had seemed on the Augusta. Indeed, Alan Kirk turned out to have no "side," no false front, no "phony presence." Our Centurion said of Alan Kirk:

"He's the only big man I ever saw who could sit down and discuss the affairs of the world on a human level with a variety of people—from kids who have the advantage of realizing how little they know to book publishers who have the disadvantage of thinking they know more than they do. This human quality strikes me as the best sort of greatness."

But the admiral's interests ranged beyond conversation with all sorts and all ages; he was a lover of opera and musical shows, a wide reader, and a genial host. His skills, apart from seamanship, included the handling of Communists and the cooking of corned beef hash. He knew more than most about both ballistics and propaganda.

Alan Goodrich Kirk was born in Philadelphia. His father was a wholesale grocer. But his uncle was a naval admiral and turned the boy toward Annapolis. He graduated in 1909, an expert in gunnery and ordnance. His first service was as executive officer of the presidential yacht Mayflower. In 1939, he began a career that was to be divided between naval operations and diplomacy by becoming United States Naval Attaché in London. In 1941, he became director of Naval Intelligence in Washington. It was later disclosed that well before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor he had circulated a confidential memorandum about American naval unpreparedness and thus escaped blame for the disaster.

In the operation which brought invasion to Normandy in 1944, Kirk was in command of the Western Task Force which used almost a thousand warships, transports, and landing craft to land the United States First Army on Omaha and Utah beaches. The Normandy landing is said to have been the largest amphibious invasion in history. In twelve days, the ships under the admiral's command landed 314,514 troops, 41,000 vehicles, and 116,000 tons of supplies.

Two years later, Alan Kirk retired from the navy entering the diplomatic service first as ambassador to Belgium and minister to Luxembourg; then, in 1949, he was appointed ambassador to Moscow. The years he served in the Soviet Union were the last years of Stalin's dictatorship, and relations between Russia and the United States—allies in the war—were never worse. The Korean war practically isolated our embassy. In the course of his service as ambassador, Kirk traveled some 10,000 miles in Russia and Siberia.

After his term ended, he headed the American Committee for the Liberation of the Peoples of Russia. Later, he was appointed chief of the National Security Council's Psychological Strategy Board. Then, as late as 1962, President Kennedy, who would not let this staunch Democrat and experienced diplomat retire, appointed him to the difficult post of ambassador to China.

On Admiral Kirk's death, Kennedy sent a telegram to his widow in which he said:

"His gallantry and clarity of judgment won him the admiration of his countrymen, and at the same time his charm, his wit, and his loyalty put him at the center of a wide company of friends."

John La Farge

The loss, in the same year, of two members of our well-loved La Farge dynasty—a part for so long of The Century—was a sad one indeed. For many years we have enjoyed, in our clubhouse, the stimulating presence of Father La Farge, who could make his conversation focus on ideas. He was a Centurion of whom we were proud as his Church Society was proud of his membership. But it was not his theology that captivated most of us, it was his quiet, tolerant understanding of social pressures and the echo of his appeals for social justice borne to us from outside. It has been said that the Negro owes as much to Father La Farge as to any American in history, not excepting Lincoln. His work in this and like fields was prodigious, yet he always seemed unhurried, having time to talk with old friends, be they eminent or unknown, scholarly or illiterate, old or young. His nieces and nephews eagerly testify to his way with youth; forever the young person's companion and subtle guide.

Describing John La Farge's attributes, Cardinal Cushing said "semper agens, semper quietus." The combination of constant activity and constant calm is rare indeed. Perennially moving in spirited and controversial fields supported by unfailing peace of mind, his life work was on a plane that is beyond the hope of most of us; yet he was never at an apparent distance. His communication was direct, unobscured by any trick of eloquence. We were at ease with Father La Farge, forgetting the barrier of the cloth that separates us from many a cleric.

Born in 1880, Father La Farge was the son of the painter, John, founder of The Century dynasty. He was John and Margaret La Farge's ninth child. He decided upon the priesthood at the age of eleven. In spite of this aim he entered Harvard, then thought to be an ungodly institution, and graduated with the class of 1901 of which Robert Frost was a member. He was ordained at Innsbruck in 1905, and, on his return to the United States, he entered the Society of Jesus. In a memorial in the Herald Tribune, it is told that he "ran up to a startled gatekeeper at Grand Central Station. Somewhat out of breath, he said:

" 'For heaven's sake open the gate and let me through. I'm leaving the world on this train and must make it.' "

Leaving the world meant that he was joining the Jesuit Order at St. Andrew-on-the-Hudson at Poughkeepsie. Perhaps no Jesuit has ever abandoned the world less than Father La Farge did on that November day in New York. He trained as a novice for two years, then taught in Catholic colleges in Buffalo and Baltimore. His interest in Negroes began in 1911, and he did much teaching among them. Some ten years later, he established in Ridge, Maryland, the Cardinal Gibbons Institute, an agricultural school for Negroes.

In 1926, he joined the editorial staff of America, weekly magazine of the Jesuit Order, and through it he began his work in recognition of the rights of minority groups. Later he was instrumental in establishing the New York Catholic Interracial Council which has moved on a national scale to reduce racial tensions.

He was the author of Jesuits in Modern Times, Interracial Justice, The Race Question and The Negro, No Postponement, and an autobiography The Manner is Ordinary. The autobiography—as fast-moving and often as exciting as a novel and abundantly spiced with humor—is in The Century library and will supply many a pleasant evening for Centurions addicted to literature.

Oliver La Farge

"Harzi Nez," his Navajo name which means "Tall Cliff Dweller," was something Oliver La Farge was proud of. It symbolized for him the response to a lifetime of devotion, not only to this tribe but to all American Indians. But La Farge differed from others who have tried to befriend these original Americans in that his attitude toward them was without sentimentality. He has been described as "a tough man and a salty one" fiercely determined to raise the level of the red man in the estimation and understanding of the white Americans whose ancestors had invaded his domain. He never turned away from a controversy; he was uncompromising in his stand, and the words he spoke and wrote in his support of it were eloquent indeed.

"The Indians [he said] were here first. They did not invite us, they did not want us, and we have shown them precious little reason to become the same as the rest of us. Indians are conscious of themselves as an aboriginal aristocracy, older, smaller and prouder than the DAR or the Society of Cincinnati. . . ."

His approach to the Indian respected the Indian's dignity and reticence; he was bitter against the conventional attitude of over-cordiality that tried to conceal condescension—"a suggestion on the part of the non-Indian that he is favoring a person less fortunate than himself with his benevolence." To him an Indian was "a human being endowed with the usual range of virtues and faults, plus a conditioning resulting from a unique position in American life."

So, Oliver built slow but enduring friendships with countless persons whose normal response to the pitying complacency of most white men was hostility. And they repaid his understanding of their initial diffidence and his invariable break through it with demonstrable affection. "They have fed me," he told, "given me presents, guided and cared for me and my horse, and enabled me to pass where I would through their country."

But Oliver La Farge did not confine himself to making friends with the tribesmen. He studied their ethnic background, their tribal histories, their languages and dialects, their mores, and their religions with the methods of an anthropologist. His field work carried him over countless thousands of miles on horseback in the United States and Latin America.

The La Farge dynasty has given us some of our most distinguished and congenial Centurions. Oliver's father was the architect, the late Grant La Farge; his grandfather, the painter, John, an honorary member. His brother, the late Christopher, was with us more than twenty-five years and one member of the family is still here.

Oliver was born in New York in 1901; he entered Harvard from Groton in 1920 and graduated from Harvard College in 1924. As a boy, his father, an enthusiastic hunter and fisherman, gave him a love of outdoor life and told him many stories of the Indians he had known. In college, anthropology was his major subject, though his ambition was writing. It was the combination of these aims that made him such an eloquent champion of the American Indian. In his freshman year at Harvard, he joined an archeological expedition to the Navajo Reservation. After graduating cum laude, he directed a Tulane expedition to Mexico and Guatemala. In 1929, his first novel Laughing Boy, whose characters were Indians, won the Pulitzer Prize. In 1932, he was elected president of the Eastern Association on Indian Affairs which, later, and largely through his effort, became the effective Association on American Indian Affairs.

In the Second World War, he was the historical officer of the Army Air Transport Command, in which he was a lieutenant colonel, and won the Legion of Merit.

His books—apart from anthropological writings—include Sparks Fly Upward, Long Pennant, All the Young Men, The Enemy Gods, and The Copper Pot. Raw Material is his autobiography.

It was a curious fact, recognized by many friends, that he looked like an Indian—or, at least, like the usually accepted Indian image. His hair was jet black, his skin dark, his face thin, and his cheekbones high.

An editorial in the New York Times says: "Oliver La Farge threw his arm in kindness and affection around the shoulder of a forgotten man. No racial minority ever had a more resolute friend."

Lee Lawrie

Always an architect's sculptor, Lee Lawrie kept urging his fellow artists to forget gallery sculpture and get up "on the walls of buildings." The nation and especially the nation's capital and capitol are enriched by many examples of the art he preached and practiced. But elsewhere, too, the symbolically American character of his work dominates the buildings it adorns. One of the most celebrated is the 19-foot-high bronze figure of a sower of grain on the dome of the state capitol of Nebraska. Overseas, he was one of the sculptors who worked on sixteen American battle monuments that commemorated the Second World War.

Yet it is a fact—known only to a few of Lawrie's close friends—that, while he was working on many of these sculptures that are so identified with the spirit of America, he was not an American citizen. Born in Germany but brought, as an infant, to the United States, Lawrie grew up here and believed himself to be an American. Indeed, he voted for every president from the time he was twenty-one, was a member of the Commission of Fine Arts and of the American Academy of Arts and Letters—all of which activities required citizenship! But due to some research done by his wife in the Naturalization Service, it was discovered that he had never been naturalized. Fortunately, the Fine Arts Commission's Secretary found a law by which he could become a citizen without going through the ordeal of required papers and the usual lapse of time. So, in 1944, his status was legalized.

In the Senate Chamber of the capitol in Washington, Lee Lawrie did the three marble reliefs over the doors, "Wisdom," "Courage," and "Patriotism." He also made the models for the two monumental bronze clocks in the Senate Chamber and the wreath and eagle that flanked the Vice President's podium. He was consulting sculptor for the House Chamber, supervising the seven sculptors who did the large marble bas-relief heads of the twenty-three "great lawgivers of the world" from Hammurabi and Moses to Jefferson and George Mason.

In New York, he did the great figure "Atlas" at Rockefeller Center and much relief sculpture there; "Youth Triumphing over Evil" in the Brittany War Memorial in France; the Gettysburg Peace Memorial, and the marble mantel in the Great Mess Hall at West Point Military Academy.

In his youth, he was engaged as sculptor's assistant by the late Gutzon Borglum. A Centurion friend recalls that when he first reported for work, Borglum gave him some directions of what he was to do, then left the room, slamming the door. Wondering where the door led, young Lawrie looked through the keyhole. All he saw was the eye of Gutzon Borglum looking back at him from the other side of the keyhole.

Lee was a shy, modest man who dreaded any public appearance—even when he was being presented with an award. He had immense energy, had many commissions going at the same time, and sometimes employed as many as ten assistants. One of them remembers that he could draw as naturally as most men talk. "He would give us a very rough sketch but one which conveyed every line he wished to emphasize and say 'put this up to 8 feet' and then, when it reached a certain stage, he would take over."

He served as sculptor-member of the National Commission of Fine Arts from 1933 to 1937 and from 1945 to 1950. From 1908 to 1919, he was instructor at the Yale School of Fine Arts and, from 1910 to 1912, instructor in the Harvard School of Fine Arts. He was a Centurion for nearly half of his eighty-five years.

Robert Littell

It is a pity that his duties as a "roving editor" kept Bob Littell away from us for more than a dozen years, for if ever there was a "born Centurion," Bob was it. In the days before he began to rove he was a familiar figure in the Club—he moved among us like a magnet drawing to himself all who wanted wisdom, laughter, and warm companionship. No one had a quicker or more sympathetic humor, but it was one that inspired belly-laughs, not raucous mirth. To a friend he imparted a sense of belonging in a comradeship that was intimate and pleasantly remote from loud and vulgar egotists. He was a rare fellow, Bob was; there is scarcely more than one like him in ten million.

He came from a line of literary folk. His grandfather, exulting in the unhappily obsolete name of Eliakim, published Littell's Living Age, one of the leading literary periodicals of the late nineteenth century. His father was Philip, one of the original editors of the New Republic.

Bob was born in Milwaukee in 1896, when Philip was editor of the Sentinel. But he came East to be educated—at Groton and Harvard. He left college to join the American Field Service in France in which, according to him, his job consisted of "washing and ferrying Model T Fords." This was in 1916. At war's end, he was working for the Allied Maritime Council in London. Soon after, he became secretary to Herbert Hoover in the American Relief Administration.

In 1922, he joined the New Republic's editorial staff; five years later he was an editorial writer for the New York Post. Moving to the World, he became dramatic critic and columnist, continuing until the paper folded in 1931.

He then joined the Reader's Digest, and in five years he was one of its senior editors. In the Second World War, he was a correspondent in England and Normandy. From then, he spent most of his time abroad, still as an editor of the Digest.

He was the author of a novel, Candles in the Storm, and of a play, Gather Ye Rosebuds, written in collaboration with his brother-in-law, the late Centurion Sidney Howard. His latest book contained adaptations of his reports from Europe for the Reader's Digest. It was published in 1961.

He returned at last to the United States only in his last illness and then, unhappily, we saw little of him.

Philip James McCook

James Cameron Mackenzie

A gentle, soft-spoken fellow whose views on life were seasoned with humor, Jim never suggested to the stranger who might meet him, his importance to his profession. But there are many monuments to his art, and though he will not point them out to you, you will find and admire them. There are national evidences of his designing power such as the Naval Air Station at Floyd Bennett Field, the Naval Training School at Memphis, the United States Army Base at San Antonio de los Baños in Cuba, and the Naval Air Station at Wilwell—though this list by no means exhausts the catalogue of army, navy, and air force projects of which he was an architect.

Jim was a patriot in the best sense and took a great interest in defense installations as well as in all things military. But he was a versatile architect; he could turn to private houses, of which many were built to his specifications, and there were churches, too, and schools.

For long an enthusiastic cavalryman in New York's Squadron A, Jim became a major of field artillery in the First World War. When the next war came along, Jim was too old for overseas combat service, but his desire for military service kept him in home duty in the New York National Guard. There he was a colonel, kept his unit punctiliously drilled for any emergency, and was beloved by his men and fellow officers. He retired as a brigadier general.

A Centurion architect remembers first meeting Jim at Madison Barracks in 1917. Then, "with a quaint concept of qualifications for an artillery officer, he asked me to serve with his battery (F of the 307 FA) because he was an Architect—I use the capital advisedly—and I was about to be one." This view of a potential artillery officer seems "quaint" until we know that Jim always saw through all the conventional forms to the man he was talking to. Jim was a good officer because he never forgot that he was dealing with human beings, not stuffed uniforms.

James Cameron Mackenzie—always proud of the Scots names—was born in Lawrenceville, New Jersey. He was the son of James Mackenzie, headmaster of the Mackenzie School at Dobbs Ferry. He took his A.B. at Columbia in 1909; studied architecture at the New York School of Architecture, the École des Beaux Arts in Paris, and the École Industrielle in Lausanne, Switzerland. He practiced with McKim, Mead and White, Murphy and Dana and in his own name. He was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects, a member of the Church Architectural Guild, the National Sculpture Society, the Beaux Arts Society of New York, and the New York Architectural League. From 1940 to 1943 he was president of the Fine Arts Federation of New York.

Jim was a familiar figure at The Century. Tall, handsome, erect, his was, in spite of his modesty, a commanding presence. Strangers in the Club turned to look at him, so arresting was his distinguished appearance. His many friends always welcomed him. He was greatly loved and he will be greatly missed.

Charles W. MacMullen

One day in broad daylight and at the Long Table, Charlie MacMullen broke Article VI, Section 10 of the Club's Constitution. It was during a presidential election campaign. Next to him sat a benighted Democrat. Charlie bet him a dollar that the Republican candidate would win. Later both the Republican and Charlie won.

Charlie was not a gambler. And this lapse would not have occurred had a sporting event been in question. Charlie cherished his amateur standing too dearly to bet on an athletic contest. He loved games—games of skill—and knew much about them. He was, himself, an exceptionally fine player of both lawn and court tennis. In his youth he had excelled in hockey. At eighty-seven he was still on the golf course.

These things belonged to Charlie's lighter side, and those who knew him well loved that side, illumined as it was by slow, quiet, infectious humor. He was responsible for many a deep belly-laugh at the Long Table and in the billiard room.

But there was a serious side, too. His early life had not been all beer and skittles for Charlie. His father was head of the famous Buckley School for boys—largely, apparently, a labor of love. For when Charlie arrived in the family—his father was then sixty—there was only money enough for a public school for the boy. When he was seventeen, his father died and Charlie worked his way through Columbia School of Mines into civil engineering. With a cousin and a classmate, he founded the engineering firm of Clark, MacMullen and Riley. With it he stayed till he had survived his partners.

There was nothing spectacular about Charlie. He had neither great successes nor great failures. But when you came into the Club and saw him your heart gave a small jump of delight, and you knew you were in for a good time.

Your Historian is not supposed to delve into the family lives of Centurions. But he found Charlie's irresistible. To his children, he was a storyteller far more exciting than Scheherazade. His stories—as someone on the "inside" has told—were the "wildest and most enchanting nonsense about the adventures of anything from a mouse or a wash boiler to my favorite, 'Semolina the Faithful Servitor,' who was the central character of a long saga."

He was a Centurion for thirty-three years; his father, John MacMullen for forty, going back to 1856.

We miss you Charlie and shall, as long as our memories last!

Roswell Magill

Philip Sanford Marden

Philip Marden, who died in his ninetieth year, helped maintain, in 1963, The Century's tradition of longevity. An author, a journalist, and an inveterate traveler, his interests were, for the most part, regionally directed. His journalistic work was on a newspaper of his native city, Lowell, Massachusetts. Beginning as a practicing lawyer and a member of the Massachusetts Bar, he switched after three years as special attorney for a local syndicate to the office of managing editor of the Lowell Courier-Citizen. He soon became editor-in-chief and contributed much to the paper's editorial page including a supplementary weekly article. When, in 1941, the Courier-Citizen was bought by the Lowell Sun, his writing became familiar to the Sun's readers under the heading "Saturday Chat."

He was the author of several books, most of them written as a result of his varied extensive travels. These appeared between 1907 and 1942 and included Greece and the Aegean Islands, Travels in Spain, Egyptian Days, Sailing South, A Wayfarer in Portugal, and such adaptations of his newspaper articles as Detours, Passable but Unsafe and In Times Like These.

Born in Lowell in 1874, Philip Marden was educated in the local high school and at Dartmouth College, from which he graduated with the class of 1894. Before entering the Harvard Law School, he spent a year doing newspaper work and thus formed the attachment for journalism that eventually drew him away from the law. He remained devoted to his alma mater and served for ten years as an alumni trustee of Dartmouth. The college also gave him the honorary degree of Master of Arts. His cultural activities were in the Lowell Art Association, of which he was president, and the Lowell Literary Club.

Frank Lamont Meleney

In 1955, Dartmouth gave Frank Meleney an honorary degree as Doctor of Science. This was the citation:

> Since Lister's time, no surgeon has studied so intensively and has made so many original contributions to the bacteriology of infection and inflammation requiring surgical therapy.

Doctor Meleney is described by one of his former students—now a Centurion doctor—as a strong and colorful character who had so much dogged determination and endless energy that he often exhausted his assistants and those he taught. He was an indefatigable watchdog of technique. He invented highly original devices such as what is described as a Rube Goldberg mask "which covered his head completely except for his spectacled eyes and two long rubber tubes leading to a suction outlet in the wall, giving him somewhat the aspect of a deep-sea diver. His assistants not infrequently became entangled in the tubing, much to his annoyance and the (silent) amusement of his junior assistants. He never could understand why his colleagues did not follow his example."

When antibiotics came into medical and surgical use, Frank Meleney was in the vanguard of their study and laboratory experiment. With an assistant, Miss Balbina Johnson, he discovered a highly effective antibiotic which he named "Bacitracin." He also devised a treatment of infected wounds involving a suspension of zinc peroxide which became celebrated and brought him many patients from great distances.

His vacations were spent on Martha's Vineyard, where he painted seascapes that were exhibited in The Century's amateur shows.

Frank Meleney was educated at Dartmouth College and took his medical degree at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1916. After serving his internship at the old Presbyterian Hospital, he became an instructor in surgery and taught at the Union Medical College in Peking until 1925. It was in China that he first became interested in surgical infections and, on his return, established the surgical bacteriological laboratory in which he later made his important discoveries.

He was a founder of the American Board of Surgery, cofounder of the American Bureau for Medical Aid to China, and chairman of the Board of Advisers of the Physicians and Surgeons Club.

He was a Centurion for nearly thirty years.

Richard Sumner Meryman

Rumor had it that Meryman had still another name, Wigglesworth, which he abandoned; in any case, his friends all called him "Wig" and few knew why. He was a portrait painter by profession and a talented storyteller by avocation—a useful combination providing anodyne for the sitter. Many of his yarns were of the First World War—funny tales, mostly, with genially sketched characters. He had been hailed as one of the first "Yanks" in France, for he was in an ambulance unit before the American entry. Then he was in the camouflage corps in which his artist's training served him well.

Meryman was born in Boston in 1882 and studied in the Boston Museum School. In his first year in the school he was advised to give up the study of art because of "lack of talent," but by his last year he was admired by his classmates and chosen to assist the painter Abbott Thayer. This was the beginning of a long association in which he lived with Thayer for many years and was affectionately called "Our Wig" by the Thayer family.

The story is told in Dublin, New Hampshire, where they lived, that when Meryman started his own summer school, he borrowed an old canvas that Thayer had stored in his barn, to use as an inspiration to his pupils. When he was through with it, he rolled it up and put it back in the barn. But "Wig" had become attached to the painting. Soon after, the barn was struck by lightning and caught fire. Wig rushed into the burning building and saved the canvas.

Because the painting was done in his early days, Thayer had forgotten that it was his. Indeed, he denied having anything to do with it. After his death, however, it was identified as a Thayer and sold for the highest price ever brought by a Thayer canvas.

Meryman was devoted to Dublin and lived there much of his life. Unhappily he was not widely known by Centurions as he suffered a crippling disability soon after his election. Those who did know him were greatly drawn to him and admired his courage under his later affliction.

The subjects of his portraits included Sherman Adams, Centurion Claude Fuess, Governor Lane Dwinell of New Hampshire, and several army generals.

Arthur Darby Nock

Whenever you entered The Century clubhouse you always knew whether Arthur Nock was there. If he was, his voice resounded in the farthest corners. Perhaps he would be telling a story at the Round Table in the East Room; or he would be reciting a poem or expounding out of his vast store of knowledge. So you would say to Daniel, "I hear that Professor Nock is in the Club." And Dan would say with the admiring chuckle in which all of us at times greeted the name of this enthusiastic man, "Yes, indeed, he is, sir, upstairs in his usual place."

A stranger, coming unprepared within the range of that exuberant voice in the midst of an anecdote, might suspect the celebrated professor of levity. It might be difficult to explain that his subject was religion. Surely, there was no pious note in his speech. But for Arthur Nock, worship was not to be approached in hushed whispers but as a study perhaps more fascinating than that of any other human impulse. He entered it, whether it be Christianity, Judaism, or Buddhism, with the ebullient enthusiasm that amplified everything he touched.

"He has sought the answers," writes an anonymous literary portraitist in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin for November 4, 1946, "to the puzzling questions in the history of religion, not so much in the words of the leaders of various movements as in the lives and society of peoples. Instead of the traditionally Christian approach, he has examined Christianity from the pagan's viewpoint.... It is the attitude of man 'towards his god or dream or devil' which has concerned Professor Nock."

Many Centurions remember an exhibition in our gallery in 1943, sponsored by Arthur Nock. It was called "Faiths and Symbols" for which he wrote the Introduction. A symbol, he defined as "a thing which has a meaning to the man in the know which goes beyond its literal and obvious significance." Sacred scriptures for instance are just books to the outsider; "to the insider they are something immeasurably more." The exhibits included Buddhas, Tibetan prayer wheels, crucifixes, and ikons. "What is offered here," said Nock, "is an attempt to present certain things that have been holy to men or that are holy to them today."

Arthur Darby Nock was born in Portsmouth, England, was educated at Cambridge University and also taught there. At Harvard's invitation, he came from Cambridge, England, to Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he was Frothingham Professor of the History of Religions. He became an American citizen, but what some of us thought an extreme English inflection betrayed his British origin.

He was joint-editor of The Oxford Classical Dictionary and editor of the Harvard Theological Review. He gave a celebrated undergraduate course on the history of religions. He wrote Sallustius Concerning the Gods and the Universe, published in 1926, Early Gentile Christianity (1928), Conversion (1933), and St. Paul (1938), all profound studies which are considered classics of the literature of theology.

He remained a bachelor and lived in Eliot House at Harvard. He is described by Harvard men as "a beloved and picturesque figure in the Yard."

He came to New York about once a month and rarely failed to visit The Century.

William Howard Nye

When the news came that he was dead at seventy-nine, Bill Nye's Centurion friends could not believe it. First, none of us could credit that so stalwart a man was on the threshold of eighty, but that he was dead was impossible to accept. We still expect to see his commanding figure enter the East Room and come to the Round Table where he was more stimulating than any of its drinks. Bill did not come to us as often as we would have liked for he lived a busy life in Boston, but when he came it always seemed as if he belonged here. There was none of this "Well, well, when did you arrive?" with Bill; we simply went on with our talk where it had last left off.

Bill was above all a Yankee; he talked with the slow precision that is often erroneously called a "drawl"; he was a devoted Cape Codder and a knowledgeable and practiced fisherman. He delighted in outdoor life of all kinds—perhaps it was that that kept him healthy in the years when many of us start a decline. He especially enjoyed the products of his fishing and wanted his friends to enjoy them too. When he would hear that his friend, the late, loved Centurion, Vic McCutcheon was having a party in his Washington Square garden, Bill would send him a barrel of oysters. The parties, of course, would consist mainly of Centurions and Bill's oysters along with Vic's fabulous hospitality will be long remembered by many of us.

The late Mahonri Young once asked: "What is it about Bill, whenever he puts in an appearance everybody seems suddenly to become more cheerful and pleasant?" He was a devoted member. He liked the company of Centurions, but he also liked the food and wine which must have compensated for the weighty business he did in New York. In the old days, he never missed a dinner of that gourmet's inner circle of The Century, The American Garlic Society. Bill was also a member of the Club of Odd Volumes and the Goose and Gin Club, testimony to the variety of his tastes.

William Nye was a construction engineer by profession. He graduated from Harvard in 1906 and joined the Western Electric Company, working in Chicago, Indianapolis, Omaha, and Minneapolis. In 1910, he joined the Turner Construction Company, but, three years later, he left to form his own construction firm, W. H. Nye and Company, in New York. In the First World War, he supervised the construction of cantonment buildings in New York's forts and the building of an army supply depot in Brooklyn.

After the war, he went back to Turner. In its Boston branch, he undertook the construction of the John Hancock building, the New England Telephone and Telegraph building, the Liberty Mutual and the New England Life buildings. He retired as vice-president of the firm in 1955.

He kept always in touch with his Harvard classmates and was a familiar figure at his class reunions in Cambridge. No matter how demanding his professional work might be, there was always room in his life for fun with his friends and loyalty to institutions like The Century to which they belonged.

George Ashton Oldham

Dignity mellowed by humor was what struck you first and most about Ashton Oldham. The dignity belonged to his position in the Church. The humor belonged to him. "Bishop Oldham loved the Church and the Judeo-Christian tradition. As a man and as a priest, he lived in the light of this heritage.... He loved people and lived to help them. Possessed of a strong sense of the importance of life and of form, he was intolerant of shoddiness, but never of people." These were among the words of a memorial read at a meeting of the Trustees of the Council on Religion and International Affairs by Centurion Thomas Clark Pollock.

George Ashton Oldham was born in Sunderland, England, in 1877. He graduated from Cornell in 1902, from the General Theological Seminary and was ordained a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1905. In the next three years, he was curate at Grace Church and at St. Thomas's, in New York, and chaplain of Columbia University.

In 1922, he was called to the Diocese of Albany as bishop coadjutor. From 1929 to 1949, he was bishop of Albany. His retirement at the age of seventy-two was merely a matter of statutory form. As another Centurion bishop writes: "Bishop Oldham never really retired. While he yielded his episcopal jurisdiction in the Diocese of Albany, he continued to be active in various concerns. It was always a joy to be involved with him in anything."

Among the "various concerns" were pastoral work as a locum tenens in St. Paul's Church in Waco, Texas, and in New York's Church of the Ascension.

Bishop Oldham was much attached to The Century. A Centurion writes: "I had the pleasure of lunching or dining with him at The Century a number of times and each time he glowed with pleasure (in some curious way, the word glowed seems to me exact here) all the time he was in the Club."

Irving Sands Olds

"Every American business," said Irving Olds at the celebration of Yale's 250th Anniversary, "has a direct obligation to support the free, independent, privately endowed colleges and universities of this country to the limit of its financial ability and legal authority. And unless it recognizes and meets this obligation, I do not believe it is properly protecting the long-range interests of its stockholders, its employees, and its customers."

These words would suggest, if it were necessary, that the thought and activity of this executive of one of our greatest industrial corporations reached far beyond business. And they reached beyond educational formalities too into the arts, literature, music, and history. Yet, when you first met Irving Olds, you could scarcely believe that this modest person with the soft voice, the friendly smile, and the unbusy manner could exert the driving force in so many business and cultural directions.

Of educational institutions, Yale above all attracted his attention. Yet, as trustee of the U.S. Steel Foundation, he practiced his preaching by encouraging the support by business of more than 750 liberal arts colleges, universities, and institutes. The two New York "Mets"—the museum and the opera—shared his official devotion; so, too, did the Lincoln Center, the New York Public Library, the Pierpont Morgan Library, and the American Shakespeare Festival and Academy.

Irving Sands Olds was born in Erie, Pennsylvania, in 1887. He was educated at Erie High School and at Yale College from which he graduated in 1907. After three years at Harvard Law School, he began his legal career as secretary to Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. He then joined the firm of White and Case, of which he became a partner in 1917. He became a director of the United States Steel Corporation in 1936, and, after acting as special counsel to the corporation, he was elected chairman of the board, a position he held till his retirement in 1952.

In recognition of his educational interests, he has been awarded honorary degrees by fifteen colleges and universities. After his retirement he served on the Yale University Council—of which he became president in 1959—and he was chairman of the Board of Trustees of Cooper Union in New York. He returned, too, to the practice of law with his old firm, White and Case.

His hobby was the collection of American historical prints, of which he published a volume in 1951. In and out of the book, there were some five hundred prints. He was deeply interested in American naval history and published The United States Navy, 1776-1815 in 1942. His favorite recreations were trout and salmon fishing.

Irving Olds was a member of The Century for thirty years. He was devoted to the Club and was often there at noon time.

A lawyer, a journalist, and an authority on international affairs, Ralph Page was also a member of a distinguished family of the "old South" and, with his qualities of courtesy and gentleness, much in character with the tradition. His father, Walter Hines Page, was first editor of the Atlantic, then a partner in the publishing firm of Doubleday, Page and Company, and later American ambassador at the Court of St. James's—a post he held during the First World War.

Ralph, known to his intimates as "Doodle," thus grew up in a diplomatic ambience and learned much about the complexities of European politics, which helped him in his career as newspaper editor and columnist. He was not confined, however, by any professional preoccupation. He was active in real estate and plantation administration. With Centurion Raphael Pumpelly, he was a pioneer in the development of Samarcand Plantation, a project for peach growing in the sandhills of North Carolina.

Born in St. Joseph, Missouri, more than eighty years ago, he spent his boyhood in Boston, where his father held his editorial post. He graduated from Harvard College in 1903 and, later, from the Harvard Law School. He practiced law briefly in New York, where his father had entered the publishing business. For a time, he added to his law work by the contribution of articles to such magazines as World's Work and Current History. He was diverted by the First World War into the "preparedness" drive and was active at the Plattsburg officers' training camp. At war's end, he began his work in the Carolinas; parallel with this, he edited the Pinehurst Outlook.

He entered the vocation of journalism in 1933 when he joined the editorial staff of the Evening Bulletin in Philadelphia. It was an interesting commentary on the American tradition of freedom of the press that he was able to maintain his democratic and liberal views in his daily column in this extremely conservative paper. He eventually became the Bulletin's Washington correspondent.

As an editorial entitled "A Man of Infinite Variety" in the Bulletin after Ralph Page's death told its readers, he was celebrated off the record for "his booming laugh, his gaiety in personal conversation, his unfailing kindness." The editorial added that "his memory will remain alive for a long, long time."

Franklin Eddy Parker, Junior

When certain parts of the Maine lumber trade moved west, they took the ancestors of Frank Parker with them, and that is how Frank came to be born in Bay City, Michigan. But the call "Go East, young man" came to him when it got to be time for him to pursue his education, and a Harvard friend remembers that "he brought to Harvard an enthusiasm and a dedication which were a delight to his classmates."

The heavy handicap of weak eyesight presented an early challenge. At college he faced it not only in his studies but even in football. He did not make a team, though he went through much of the training, and when the First World War came along his defect kept him out of the army. But in each case he did the next best thing. At Harvard, he became a pillar of the daily paper—The Crimson—and at war's end he went with Archibald Carey Coolidge to the Middle East to make rules that would provide a more secure peace at Paris.

Harvard Law School made him a lawyer. His clients remember not only his soundness in his profession but the affection they had for him even during purely professional meetings. His counsel extended far beyond the boundaries of legal matters. We in The Century like lawyers when they suddenly turn out to be human beings as well, and Frank was certainly one of those. Here, we associate him with those great immortals who were his friends: George Martin, Charlie Curtis, and Whitney Griswold.

Frank Parker was admitted to the New York Bar in 1924. He practiced with Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, then with Parker and Garrison, later with Parker, Finley and Benjamin, and finally with Parker, Duryee, Benjamin, Zunine and Malone. He was admitted to the Connecticut Bar in 1948.

He lived in Greenwich, where he was chairman of the Board of Estimate and Taxation. At his death, Greenwich Time wrote of him in an editorial: "an outstanding lawyer, a dedicated public official and a warm, kindly man with a wonderful sense of humor."

Frank was a Centurion for nearly half of his life.

George Faulkner Plimpton

"Quiet, intelligent, steady, dependable, loyal to a degree and lovable"—so a fellow Centurion and a college classmate describes George Plimpton. His interests reached far and wide; they embraced the law, education, and many kinds of social activity. It is said that he joined every committee that approached him and never missed a social function. He was closely associated with Harvard; after he had become its associate dean, he and Mrs. Plimpton held what his friends called a "minor salon," popular among Centurions who were also Bostonians.

As a boy in school, he established a record in studies by maintaining a composite grade of over 99 for an entire term. The record still stands at Hill. At Harvard, he was a member of the Student Council and manager of the football team, in which latter job he displayed the extraordinary capacity for detail which distinguished him through life. "He knew the names of every candidate after the first day on the field and on the second day, he knew the size of their jerseys and shoes and their intelligence." He carried this talent into his work as officer in two wars.

After his graduation from Harvard College in 1914, he took his law degree at the University of Buffalo. In 1916 he served on the Mexican Border with the First New York Cavalry. In the First World War, he was a captain of field artillery and was discharged as a major.

After some ten years of practice with the Buffalo law firm of Kenefick, Cook, Mitchell, Bass and Letchworth, he gave up the law and went back to Harvard as associate dean. There he was in charge of alumni placement and student employment.

In the Second World War, George was a colonel in the Transport Division and was assigned to a ship that plied back and forth across the Pacific, transporting soldiers.

He was a devoted Centurion, and, though he did not live in New York, he came as often as he could to monthly meetings, making the trip with that group of gay and friendly Boston members that we always welcomed with open arms.

Henry Barber Richardson

There was something almost mystic about Harry; his mere presence was curative. There was no "bedside manner"; Harry was too honest for any polite pretense. He spoke in a low monotone without emphasis or color—there was, indeed, a sort of die-away quality in his voice—yet, if you were his patient you felt better after he had spoken. When he went out of a sickroom, he left something behind him, something of confidence and strength that you could never explain.

Consciously, Harry never knew that he had that quality; yet, it may have led him into the study of the human mind and emotions that doctors call psychiatry. And it made him a good psychiatrist because of the subtle affinity he attained with those who needed his healing.

Other doctors often thought him a controversial fellow. He fought attempts of medical societies to regiment or to dictate the opinions of physicians. In testimony before a subcommittee on manpower of the Senate, he said:

"Our dogma of organized medicine has done much to retard progress. That is the claim that medical care is the exclusive province of the physician, and that among physicians only those who act through the channels of the medical organizations have the knowledge and the capacity to judge what is needed and how to carry it into effect."

He was a member of the Physicians' Forum, a group that favored the administration's program for care of the aged under social security. As this was anathema to many physicians and to the American Medical Association, his stand was a courageous one.

The son of a professor of surgery, Harry took his doctor's degree at Harvard Medical School where his father taught. In the First World War, he served in the Army Medical Corps. After the war, he became a Fellow of the Russell Sage Institute of Pathology in New York. Later, he was instructor at the Medical College of Cornell University and, in 1932, became associate professor of clinical medicine at Cornell. He began the study of psychoanalysis at the Columbia Psychoanalytic Clinic for Training and Research in 1945 and entered psychiatric and psychoanalytic practice four years later.

Harry Richardson was a devoted Centurion. In all the thirty-five years of his membership, he came to the Club in every hour he could spare from his busy profession. He especially enjoyed the monthly meetings and there was always a group of men about him listening to the ideas he expressed in a minimum of words and in so low a voice that you had to listen closely. In his vacations on Cape Cod, he was an enthusiastic fisherman and spent many hours exploring the wide marshes in a canoe. A Centurion who was often with him on such occasions, writes:

"At lunch time we would tie up at the nearest grassy hummock. Then Harry would open the lunch basket which always managed to contain a thermos of ice cold martinis.... Much of our time was spent in easy silence." It is a rare gift, that of making silence "easy," and Harry had it more than most of us.

Lawrason Riggs

A lawyer by profession, Lawrason Riggs was an amateur photographer, sailor, oceanographer, astronomer, and man of letters. He could also sketch and play the harmonica. At The Century, when he was not in the poolroom where he played billiards as well as cowboy he would sit on the terrace through long summer evenings and fascinate the group that gathered round him. Every incident of his life was an adventure; he never lost his curiosity about every phase of life. As the rector who officiated at his funeral said of him: "His vast interests and quenchless mental hunger kept law in its proper place, leaving him free to wander and wonder endlessly in all parts of God's fascinating world."

From birth, Lawrason was handicapped by obscure vision, the result of congenital cataracts. As a boy, he was forbidden to read for more than five minutes consecutively after which he would have to rest for another five. Yet, at St. Paul's School, at Columbia College, and at Columbia Law School, he was always near the top of his class. At the law school he had the rare distinction of editing the Law Review. Throughout his life he was a student of the classics and a constant reader. He also was able to sail at night in the tricky waters about Woods Hole, Massachusetts, where he lived, while many another with clear vision ended on a reef.

In Woods Hole, he was president of the Marine Biological Laboratory and later trustee emeritus. He was also treasurer of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Society. These interests extended to Bermuda where he was a trustee of Bermuda Biological Station.

In New York he was a devoted member of the Society of Literary Knowledge, a group composed largely of Centurions that met fourteen times a year and read papers about some new literary discovery or analyses of some literary work. Riggs wrote many such papers; all of them had a background of thorough research.

Lawrason Riggs was born in St. Louis in 1881. After graduating from St. Paul's, he took his bachelor's degree at Columbia in 1903. He was then a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He took his law degree from Columbia Law School three years later. He practiced law with the firm of Riggs, Ferris and Geer, which later became Riggs, Ferris, Trafford and Syz. His practice was largely in the estate and trust field.

His early eye trouble was compensated for by a detailed, almost photographic memory. Members of the Society of Literary Knowledge say that he could remember every paper that had been read there with the single exception of one of his own.

He was a member of the New York City Bar Association for fifty-five years. He was trustee and secretary of the Society for the Relief of the Destitute Blind in New York and a director of the Near East College Association.

His many friends remember that his distinguishing virtues were patience, persistence, and optimism. These qualities were with him throughout the phases of his optical affliction and many other troubles that would have defeated men less endowed with faith and peace of mind.

He was with us in The Century for more than forty years—over half his life.

Edgar Franklin Romig

His career as a minister and as a much loved church pastor has somewhat obscured Edgar Romig's adventurous life in the Middle East in his younger days. In 1913, still in his twenties, he was a teacher in The Syrian Protestant College, which later became the American University of Beirut. To boys of many nationalities, he taught high school English; he also supervised one of the dormitories and had a great personal influence on the students.

In those days the whole Middle East to the border of Iran was under Ottoman suzerainty. During an Easter vacation, Romig and some other teachers took a walking trip in Palestine. They chose a primitive region and took no interpreter along. They were attacked by a group of Arabs who supposed them to be a band of hostile Jews seeking revenge for some bloody incident. One of the men was shot and badly wounded: the shooting just missed Romig. They were rescued at length by an Armenian who ran a kind of marathon and alerted the police. The attack became cause célèbre.

Romig spent three years at the college and was caught in the midst of a bitter controversy between the Turks and the Lebanese in which there was bloodshed and starvation.

Returning to the United States after the First World War, he studied at Columbia and the Union Theological Seminary and was ordained. He served as pastor of the Middle Church and West End Church in New York. He became senior minister of New York's four Collegiate churches.

Centurions knew Pastor Romig as a quietly persuasive man. When he was on the Committee on Admissions, he had definite ideas about the candidates. When the meeting began, the majority was usually against him. But when it ended the ratio was reversed.

Formerly, Dr. Romig was president of the General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in America. He was a friend of the royal family of Holland, and the late queen Wilhelmina made him a Knight of the Order of Orange-Nassau.

In the Church, he was known as a progressive. He urged unity. He was a leader of the Ecumenical movement. He published a biography of Jonas Michaelius, founder of the first American Dutch Church in America. He was also the author of a life of William the Silent, Prince of Orange.

A short time before his death, Romig visited the Beirut university where once he had taught and was given an ovation.

Gorham Phillips Stevens

A writer and teacher of architecture, Gorham Stevens was especially devoted to classical studies. When he was in Athens during the Second World War, the Germans had such respect for his reputation that they left him alone to do his important work there. Part of it was a model of the entire Acropolis done in great detail. He had learned Greek history, mythology, and traditions until they became a part of him, and colleagues who were with him in Greece and walked with him among the monuments believed that he felt himself not surrounded by any present world but wholly by the ancient splendor. Temples and statues which his friends saw as relics, he reconstructed in his mind and saw as they were in the midst of the people of their day. Even on sites on which no relic remained he would see the vanished glory of a monument as he once saw the statue of Athena, though its location had been forgotten.

Sympathetic reminiscences of Stevens were given to your Historian by a close Centurion colleague—architect himself and a classical student.

"To be guided by Stevens," this friend wrote, "through Agara and up through the Propylaea on to the top was an experience never to be forgotten.... I remember too on a visit some years ago, while we were sitting on the level of Areopagus, musing about St. Paul, one of my friends, a great student of St. Paul was with us, and Stevens asked permission to tell a story....

"It had to do with St. Paul coming up from the marketplace where he had been threatened with execution unless he left Athens before sundown. As he came by the Areopagus on his way, some of the wise elders interrupted him and had a long pleasant talk with him. They seemed to like in general all of his thoughts and persuaded him to stay on in Athens—not to be concerned with the mob. Then he said something about the resurrection. Suddenly everything was altered—the elders took him to the top of the hill, pointed toward Corinth and said, 'You better get out quick and go over there to Corinth. Those people are so dumb, they would believe anything.'"

Like many Centurions, his first architectural work was in the offices of McKim, Mead and White. He became director of the American Academy in Rome and held this post for many years. He was also director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens. In his will he left the Academy in Rome a bequest of $100,000.

Stevens was a skillful archeologist and had great mechanical ingenuity. He spent hours scaling the slopes of the Acropolis, studying every fallen stone, and especially the bronze clamps that had held the stones together. He was able to report mistakes that had been made by other archeologists, and his findings caused a stir all over Europe.

Centurions will remember him by the Christmas cards he sent to the Club with pictures of classical architecture.

Kenneth Taylor

Because of his excessive modesty, his refusal to acknowledge credit for his great achievements, his lifesaving work has been stacked up in the body of medical advances. This has sometimes happened in the case of army doctors who, in the urgency of war service, have made discoveries which benefit society in a world of peace as well as in one of war.

In the First World War, the soil of French battlefields, on which so many wounded fell, was deeply infected with causes of gangrene—that most horrible of war afflictions. Working with soil samples in laboratories as well as with the suffering wounded, Taylor found an antiseptic which restored many thousands of men of many nationalities who would otherwise have perished. Although Taylor worked in a group of investigators, medical men in general think of him as the mastermind of the experimenters. Yet:

"Don't give me the credit," he said. "I only helped. The whole thing grew up gradually and my antiseptic was only a secondary part of the new treatment we developed."

During the war, he spent a year in Neuilly Hospital and later moved to Paris to join Dr. Joseph Blake in a new hospital there. In March, 1917, he opened a hospital in Paris under the auspices of the American Red Cross, and there he set up his laboratory. It was afterward taken over and militarized by the United States Army staff. Two years later, he was promoted to lieutenant colonel. After the war, he worked in the Balkans.

Later he practiced in New York where he often visited The Century. He was a skilled amateur painter and used to exhibit his work in our gallery.

Centurion Adriaan Barnouw, in a poem which accompanied his portrait of Ken Taylor, paid him what is, perhaps, the greatest personal tribute and no memorial could be complete without a quotation from it:

> It was a work of love to paint
> A man who is an almost saint...
> His portrait ought to show him such
> As patients whom he cured behold

Their saviour's features: aureoled
With halo of their ecstasy.
Alas, such art is not in me.
I'm not a Giotto. I can paint
The friend in Ken, but not the saint.

Walter Andrews Taylor

Samuel Thorne

Samuel Thorne divided his time between the law and the Church. He was a lawyer by profession and an Episcopalian layman. His encouragement of sociological projects within the Church's framework and of philanthropies to which he made personal contributions entitled him to a high place as an organizer of ecclesiastical and educational activities. He was first president of the Church Army in the United States; a trustee of the American Council of St. Luke's International Medical Center in Tokyo, of Yale in China, and of the American University in China. After his retirement from the law in 1934, he directed most of his energies in these directions.

Samuel Thorne was born in Saugatuck, Connecticut, in 1874 and graduated from Yale in 1896. He took his law degree at Harvard Law School in 1899 and was admitted to the New York Bar in 1900. He began his professional work in the New York County District Attorney's office under Eugene A. Philbin and continued under William Travers Jerome. In 1916, he became a member of the firm of Delafield, Thorne, Rogers and Howe where he specialized in real estate. He was a member of the American Bar Association, American Judicature Society, the American Branch of the International Law Association, and the Harvard Law School Association.

He lived in Rye, New York, and died there in his ninetieth year.

Chauncey Brewster Tinker

A visit to Malahide castle near Dublin, Ireland, led to what Chauncey Tinker called "the greatest crisis in my life. I have never faced anything like it and never will again." The world of literature has been greatly illumined by what Tinker found on that visit. But for him, the treasure might still be locked in the ancient castle.

Like many other professors of English literature, he had been fascinated by Boswell's revelations of Doctor Johnson and, incidentally, of himself. Tinker's preoccupation with the famous biographer had been indicated by two books: Young Boswell and a collection of Letters of James Boswell in two volumes. But, he knew that somewhere in the world there were undiscovered Boswell papers; his hunch was that they were in Ireland. So, he advertised in various Irish newspapers, and one of them came up with Malahide. Tinker then arranged to have tea at the castle with Lord Talbot, a Boswell descendant. Sure enough, Talbot showed him a cabinet filled with Boswell manuscripts. It was a great day for the English department at Yale!

The castle was explored and more papers were found. The Yale library bought them all, and, as we know, they have since been published in several volumes. These have not only filled a gap in the scholarly accumulations of eighteenth-century England, they have furnished instruction and entertainment for thousands of nonacademic readers.

Chauncey Tinker belongs with Billy Phelps, Wilbur Cross, and John Berdan in what the university calls "that Olympian band of scholars who made the Yale English Department so widely known during the 1920's and 1930's." His disciples among undergraduates and graduates call themselves "Tinkerians," and the group is represented on the faculties of more than twenty colleges and universities. Thus the Tinker gospels have been spread far.

At Yale, where undergraduates voted him "the most inspiring" and "one of Yale's greatest teachers," his lectures held the students in an almost hypnotic suspense. One listener spoke of his teaching having "a high voltage of electrical current which stimulated even the most lumpish of his auditors." His most celebrated undergraduate course, "The Age of Johnson" was known throughout Yale as "The Age of Tinker."

Chauncey Brewster Tinker was born in Auburn, Maine, eighty-seven years ago. He received his secondary education in Colorado, at East Denver High School. He graduated B.A. from Yale in 1899 with honors in English; he took his M.A. in 1900 and his Ph.D. in 1902. After a year of teaching at Bryn Mawr College, he joined the Yale faculty. There, he became first an English instructor, then an associate professor, and, in 1913, a full professor. From 1923 until his retirement in 1945, he was Sterling Professor of English Literature. He was popularly known as the Dean of American Eighteenth-Century Scholars.

Tinker, or "Tink" as the boys liked to call him, was an author as well as a teacher. The Good Estate of Poetry, in 1929, was followed ten years later by Painter and Poet and, in 1940, by The Poetry of Matthew Arnold.

Like all good teachers, Tink had a talent for setting pompous students back on their heels. He is said to have remarked to a boy who with much self-satisfaction had just read a grandiose paper to the class: "Young man, your icing is thicker than your cake."

Chauncey Tinker was a Centurion for thirty-five years.

John Vredenburg Van Pelt

(This memorial was omitted from the 1963 Year-Book because of insufficient information.)

"Gothic," said John Van Pelt, "is the only style that can architecturally express religious emotion."

The design of churches was perhaps the best known accomplishment of Van Pelt's architectural career although he was also responsible for several institutional buildings including sanitoria, libraries, and town halls. He taught at Cornell and was formerly dean of the College of Architecture of Cornell University.

He was born in New Orleans. When he was fourteen, his mother, who was of French descent, moved to Paris, and John soon began a brilliant career at the École des Beaux Arts. He was the first American to win the title of Architecte Diplôme par le Gouvernement. This was in 1895, and, in the two following years, he was named laureate of the Société des Architects Diplôme par le Gouvernement. On his return to the United States, he was appointed assistant professor of architecture in charge of design at Cornell. He was soon made full professor and then dean. In 1904, he resigned to take the position of director of the Hastings Atelier at Columbia. Ten years later, he moved to the University of Pennsylvania where he became professor of design. Throughout his life, he lectured and wrote on various phases of architecture. He had, as well, a talent for painting.

Among his designs are those of the Church of St. John of Nepomuk, Long Island, the Church of the Guardian Angels in New York, the pedestal for Anna Hyatt Huntington's Statue of Joan of Arc on Riverside Drive, the Loomis Sanitarium at Liberty, New York, and the Union Health Center of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union. On Long Island, he designed the Patchogue Municipal Building, the Patchogue Library, and the Brookhaven Town Hall Contemporary Arts Building. He planned the Cornell athletic fields. He served as secretary of The New York State Fine Arts Committee and as a member of The New York Fine Arts Federation.

He left us in his eighty-ninth year.

Sidney Biehler Waugh

There was something about Sidney that made you glad you were sitting next to him at the Round Table or wherever it might be: a gift for making you feel you were in his special confidence—that you and only you could understand the full meaning of his few words. He communicated by suggestion, not by explanation; a sentence, perhaps only a gesture, told what another might take an hour in the telling. And there was a distinction about Sidney that was contagious; you too became distinguished when you were with him. It was not merely the perfection of his dress or the quiet orderliness of his manner or the far reaches of his knowledge that attracted you—these things might be forbidding in someone else—but rather it was the sense that he shared it all with you.

He came often to The Century at cocktail hour and for dinner. His drink was a sublimated martini whose composition only the barman knew; it was without ice and there was never more than one. He talked in a low voice with little emphasis or inflection, but everyone knew he was there. And most of us had a measure of affection for him.

He was, of course, a talented sculptor. Though much of his work was architectural adornment of appropriate dimension, he had gifts of delicacy and precision especially adapted to design in glass. For thirty years he was associated as designer with Steuben Glass of the Corning Glass Works. He fashioned gifts for several royal persons and heads of state: these included the wedding present of a bowl from President Truman to Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh; the presentation by his cabinet to President Eisenhower of a glass cup; and other gifts to Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, the Shah of Iran, and King Farouk of Egypt.

In Washington, his work is in such government buildings as the National Archives, the Post Office Department, and the Federal Reserve Board. His sculptures are also in New York, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh.

In the Second World War, Sidney served in Europe with military intelligence units and the Allied Military Government. His duties included the security of art treasures and were sometimes performed under fire. He was awarded the Silver Star, the Bronze Star, the Croix de guerre (twice), and he was made a Knight of the Crown of Italy.

A Centurion who knew Sidney well remembers his photographic memory. "He not only knew an extraordinary amount of poetry by heart, but he could read down a page of poetry or prose that was new to him and then recite it word for word."

He was born in Amherst, Massachusetts, went to M.I.T., studied briefly in Rome, and worked in Paris with Emile Bour-delle and Henri Bouchard. He won the Prix de Rome and worked for three years as a Fellow of the American Academy.

Death took him far too soon, and we shall miss him very much.

Allen Oldfather Whipple

Allen was devoted to two institutions: Presbyterian Hospital and The Century. Few doctors have shared with us their dedication to their hospital; yet to many of us, who remember his presence at our Round Table and our Long Table, his deep interest in our traditions and our workaday activity, comes the impossible guess that he gave us equal time. But Allen, great surgeon that he was, was not confined by his exigent profession. In an address which accompanied the award to him of the Bigelow Medal by the Boston Surgical Society, Doctor David Cheever spoke of his "talents in music, in painting, the interest in books and in history, which add to your Spartan qualities of courage and self-discipline, attributes more Attic in their nature. . . ." Are these not the talents and qualities that belong to the ideal Centurion?

But, as an entertaining conversationalist and story-teller, he became a center of attention in the warmer corners of our clubhouse. His humor did not spare himself. One story told of a place he owned in Connecticut, which, like most of its surrounding region, was overgrown in summer by a pseudo-tropical vegetation. He called it "Weed Farm," and the name was painted on his station wagon. One summer he and his wife drove west. At the California border, the inspector, reading the name, was convinced that the doctor was bringing diseased plants into that purest of states and an exhaustive search ensued. Another story was about his reprimand by an agent de police about his driving through the difficult Paris streets. His French, he said, was sketchy. Intending to say "Je ne vous entend pas," he said "Je ne vous écoute pas" which so enraged the gendarme that Allen always wondered why he was not arrested.

Allen was born in northern Persia of missionary parents. He never forgot his native land. His last trip there, two years back, was devoted to a search for the remains of six Nestorian hospitals and medical schools in Iran, Iraq, Jerusalem, and Egypt.

As a boy, his Nestorian nurse told him of the Nestorian Christian sect which had been responsible for the introduction of Greek medicine into Europe. His early interest in the Near East later led to his service on the Board of Trustees of the American University in Beirut. Incidentally, he was an amateur expert on Persian rugs.

Allen Whipple was born more than eighty years ago in Urmia, Azerbajian. His ancestors were pioneer Yankees. He graduated from Princeton in 1904 and from Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1908. More than twenty years later, he became the college's first full-time professor of surgery, and, in 1930, the Valentine Mott Chair of Surgery was established for him.

His first specialty was surgery of the bilary tract and spleen. Later, he was best known for his contributions on islet cell tumors and cancer of the pancreas. Apart from professional specialties his main interest was planning for the development of the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York. Though he officially retired from the Center in 1946, his busy work continued. He occupied the post of clinical director of Memorial Hospital in New York and did much traveling to the Near East. He was also adviser to Princeton undergraduates who meant to enter the medical profession.

In the 1930s, he was president of the New York Surgical Society, of the Society for Clinical Surgery, and of the American Surgical Society. He was a founder of the Society of University Surgeons and chairman of the American Board of Surgery. He was an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in England and Foreign Associate of the Académie de Chirurgie and the Académie de Médecine in France. He was awarded the Princeton Bicentennial Medal in 1946, the American Medical Association Distinguished Service Award in 1951, the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center Award in 1953, and the Woodrow Wilson Award of Princeton University in 1958.

A Centurion says of Allen Whipple:

"There was an infinite delicacy of touch combined with great sensitivity. A lean figure topped off with bushy white eyebrows and a halo of silvery hair. He had about him an air of great quality as one of Nature's Elect. Yet he was just as plain as an old shoe. One could see in his soul... true humility."

William Laurence Whittemore

A physician loved by his patients, Larry Whittemore will be long remembered by them as well as by his fellow doctors. He was one of those medical men, unhappily rarer since the practice has become formalized, who added something curative to his wide medical knowledge. Sympathy is an inadequate term unless it means actually partaking of the patient's distress and countering it with the personal hope that is product of a robust soul.

Like many of our best doctors, Whittemore was a Canadian who after five years of service with the Canadian army—including performance of duty under fire—elected to practice in New York. He was born in Toronto in 1886, took his B.A. from the University of Toronto and his M.D. from its medical school. His internship was at New York's Roosevelt Hospital, and his service at Sloane Hospital was interrupted by the First World War in 1914.

In that year, he joined the Medical Corps of the Canadian army and was attached for a time to the 19th Canadian Battalion. Later he was in the 11th Canadian General Hospital in Sharncliffe, England, and Colchester Hospital. He was discharged as major of the Canadian Armed Forces. He was awarded the Military Cross for gallantry in action by King George V.

At war's end, he resumed private practice in New York City. He was consultant at City Hospital, Welfare Island, at Doctors' Hospital, at St. Clare's Hospital, and at Lenox Hill Hospital. During the Second World War, he was a member of New York's Medical Ration Board. In 1947, he became Chief of Medicine at Doctors' Hospital.

In the field of internal medicine, he made large contributions to medical literature. He was a Fellow of the American College of Physicians and New York Academy of Medicine.

Whittemore was very much of an outdoor man; his recreations and hobbies included sailing, shooting, fishing, golf, and photography. These were pursued in the busy intervals of his professional life at St. James, Long Island, and at Guide Island, Port Carling, Ontario, Canada.

NOTE

The most important part of the Memorials is that taken from the personal information which can be provided only by close friends of the departed Centurions. The Historian regrets that, by the time this Year-Book went to press, he had been unable to secure information of that kind concerning five of the Centurions on the 1963 roll. Their Memorials will be included in the 1965 book.—R.B.
